Roosevelt Favors Plan For Allies' Joint Action

War-Peace Program To Reach Senate Today; Connally Advises Caution

Tackle Problems

White House Parley

By Jack Bell
Associated Press Staff Writer

Senators sponsoring a resolution for a specified United Nations organization for war and peace received tentative approval of their plan from President Roosevelt yesterday—and a word or two of caution from the chairman of their Foreign Relations Committee.

Senator Connally, the white-haired Texan who heads the committee which would have charge of the resolution, favored the principle of committing the United Nations now to collective action to maintain world peace after the war but indicated strongly at a White House conference that he thought any additional commitment might be premature.

U. S. Lead Proposed

Six Senators discussed with the President a proposal that the United States take the lead in organizing the United Nations not only to set up machinery for a peaceful settlement of international disputes but to create a world police force to guard against future aggression, and to make full utilization of the Allies' military and economic resources in prosecuting the war and act jointly to govern temporarily and rehabilitate conquered areas.

Senator Hill (Democrat) of Alabama, announced after the meeting that "We had a most interesting conference. We are in agreement on the broad objectives, and we are going to have further conferences," meaning among the Senators, not with the President.

Senator Ball (Republican) of Minnesota, a sponsor of the resolution along with Hill and Senators Hatch (Democrat) of New Mexico, and Burton (Republican) of Ohio, declared definitely that it would be introduced tomorrow.

Guiding Principles

But Connally left no doubt that the resolution was unsatisfactory to him in its present form and it was understood to have been subjected to sharp criticism during a lively discussion that lasted nearly two hours.

Stemming from weeks of study and conferences among Senators, the proposal was calculated by its authors to put the Senate on record for the establishment at this time of a broad set of principles which would guide United Nations actions during the war and in the peace era to follow.

The Foreign Relations chairman was said to have told the President and his colleagues that the political situation in the Senate was such now it might be difficult to obtain approval of any except the simplest kind of resolution dealing with postwar security. The Senate's action would be worth little if only a bare majority approved the resolution, all agreed. A two-thirds majority is required to ratify a treaty.

President Impartial

To attempt to deal in the middle of the war with economic and rehabilitation problems, Connally counseled, might invite dissension among the United Nations about a problem that was secondary to winning the war.

Neither would it be wise, he urged, to interfere with the work-

Details of the wholesale price ceiling adjustments which became effective at 12:01 a. m. today on seven fresh vegetables at Washington terminals were announced at 6 p. m. yesterday by District OPA Director Robert K. Thompson, who secured the information from New York after a dearth of news had added more confusion to the District's already confused food situation.

New York regional OPA headquarters announced Saturday that the adjustments had been made, but details were not sent either to National or District OPA officials, and merchants here, lacking such information, were unable to make any forecasts yesterday as to what effect the revisions would have on the food situation.

Even after Thompson had made the list of prices available, it was still not possible to gauge their effect because it was not known what price adjustments had been made in other areas covered by the New York announcement: Maryland, Delaware, Pennsylvania.

2 Navy Fliers Hurt As Planes Collide Near Alexandria

Two aviation cadets attached to the Naval Reserve Base at Anacostia were injured at 3:40 p.m. yesterday when their planes crashed in mid-air near the Hybla Valley airport, south of Alexandria, Va.

They were James Thomas Key, 24, of Burnwell, Ala., and Thomas Marshall Miller, 25, of Milton, Pa.

The Navy Department said the extent of the men's injuries was undetermined and that the cause of the crash was not ascertained.

With OPA Watch Off, Roads Have Aspect Of Preration Days

By Philip Austensen
Post Staff Writer

The March lamb gambolled on the green yesterday but he had to dodge warily when he crossed the roads jammed with "honor-bound" motorists out for a bit of "essential driving."

Thousands of persons took advantage of the balmy, spring air to visit the parks and to stroll along the streets and highways, but thousands more apparently decided to take advantage of the absence of OPA enforcement agents and try out the old bus again.

County police reported that traffic was extremely heavy in the nearby Maryland areas, especially along the Baltimore Boulevard and Georgia Avenue. Heavy traffic was reported as far out as Rockville and Laurel.

Police said that most of the motorists obviously were pleasure drivers.

Like Old-Time Sunday

Traffic on the Baltimore Boulevard near Hyattsville was almost that of a normal Sunday, police declared, with many of the cars occupied by families apparently in no hurry to arrive at their destination or young people doing some "infatuated driving."

Motorists were placed on their honor to avoid non-essential driving a week ago, and enforcement agencies were told to stop checking cars.

Speed laws aparently were fairly well observed.

Parks in Washington and nearby Maryland were crowded with picnickers and hikers, and the bicycle stands did a booming business.

Downtown Washington had fairly heavy traffic. The motorists seemed to hanker for country air and scenery. Crowds jammed the sidewalks and the theaters.

Senate Group Votes Today On Allred

Farm Deferment Bill Heads Controversial Issues Up for Action, Debate This Week

The contested nomination of former Gov. James V. Allred of Texas to the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals comes before the Senate Judiciary Committee for a vote today, continuing the setting of controversy that has marked, to date, the life of this Congress.

Debate and action on a number of other issues that have aroused much feeling are scheduled for the week, with these highlights:

1. The Bankhead bill to defer draft-age farmers comes before the Senate again tomorrow, with two amendments to be voted on before final decision on the bill. A veto of this measure, if it passes, has been forecast.

2. Senate action is awaited on the House-approved bill, also facing a possible veto, to nullify President Roosevelt's order limiting salaries to $25,000 after taxes, and to establish a Pearl Harbor Day formula for limiting salaries.

3. House Republicans plan a fight for the Beardsley Ruml plan to forgive a year's income tax in bringing payments to a current basis, when the Ways and Means Committee measure to provide a withholding tax plan of collection is given right-of-way to the House floor.

4. Absenteeism in war plants gets the House's attention tomorrow as debate opens on a measure that would require employers to report to draft boards the names of workers frequently absent from their work without authorization.

5. Whether the several thousand Army post exchanges and similar stores for men in the armed services are seriously curtailing business of privately operated retail establishments will be considered by the Senate Small Business Committee in hearings tomorrow and Wednesday, Chairman Murray of Montana, announced yesterday.

Storm Signals

By Daniel DeLuce
Associated Press Staff Writer

Allied Headquarters in North Africa, March 14.—Allied forces have taken up the offensive in northern Tunisia, front-line dispatches disclosed today, while fighting in the area of the Mareth Line appeared to be developing into an artillery duel between Marshal Erwin Rommel's Axis troops and the British Eighth Army.

(In Cairo, a United States communique said Liberator bombers of the Ninth U. S. Air Force attacked the Italian harbor of Naples last night and all the planes returned safely, but heavy clouds over the target area obscured the results.)

British Begin Attack

Allied troops made limited advances on Nazi positions in the Tamera sector yesterday and at the same time discovered new evidence of the terrific price the Germans paid in making an unsuccessful attempt to storm through to Beja in a recent two-weeks offensive.

The British, who have held steadfastly against a series of German attacks on positions on the Mateur-Tabarca Road, began the attack on Nazis holding a high point known as Djebel Ben Marche, which commands the road from Djebel Abiod to Sedjenane. As the tough Britishers advanced slowly through thick growths they found several large groups of German dead, whose bodies had been deserted, unburied.

At one point the advancing Allies found about 100 dead Germans who had been cut down by machine gun fire in one of their recent attacks against the Tamera position.

Planes Attack Axis Vehicles

At the end of the day's infiltration and cautious fighting by the British, a number of enemy machine guns had been wiped out and part of Djebel Ben Marche was in Allied hands.

British bombers of the western desert air force continued to hammer Rommel's troops in the northern sector of the Mareth Line forti-

Offers De Gaulle Union

Giraud Broadcasts Pledge To Restore French Republic

By the Associated Press

Algiers, March 14.—Asserting he was "the servant of the French people," Gen. Henri Giraud in an address internationally broadcast today embraced the principles of the Atlantic Charter, and offered Gen. Charles de Gaulle a union on the basis of a mutual pledge that the French people would be allowed to choose their own government when they are again free.

Giraud, civil and military commander in chief in French Africa, pledged himself to govern North Africa "according to the rules of the French Republic," promised repeal of Vichy legislation, and implied that officeholders of pro-Vichy leanings would be ousted.

The liberal tone of his speech, coupled with promise of reforms, reflected efforts of Robert Murphy and Harold MacMillan, the American and British Ministers, to eliminate some features of the North African administration criticized by the British and American public.

Major points in Giraud's speech, delivered at a protest meeting against German annexation of Alsace and Lorraine, were:

1. Repeal of all Vichy legislation, particularly the anti-Jewish decrees.

2. Repeal of all racial discrimination including "the Cremieux decree which in 1870 established a distinction between the native Moslem and Jewish inhabitants."

Under the Cremieux decree, native Jews automatically became citizens, while Arabs did not unless they fulfilled certain requirements. Now, native-born Jews will have to meet those same requirements. While this step pleased the Arabs, the Jews also benefitted greatly by repeal of all anti-Jewish Vichy legislation.

3. Restoration of democratic functions in North Africa, including election of municipal assemblies and consuls general as soon as possible.

4. Elimination of all Axis influences whether "measures or

Allied Headquarters in Australia (Monday), March 15.—General MacArthur's headquarters reported "a growing concentration of enemy transports and cargo ships" in the Ambon-Dobo region, 600 miles off northwestern Australia today, and added that Japanese ground forces on these Dutch East Indies Islands are being reinforced and new airfields are being constructed.

While the Japanese thus continued to strengthen the ring of positions they have taken covering the upper half of Australia, Allied airmen operating 1000 miles to the east carried out a second day of attack on a Japanese convoy of 5 ships and 3 destroyers off Wewak, northeastern New Guinea, scoring a direct hit with a 500-pound bomb near the bow of a large destroyer and strafing its decks, and also hitting a 7000-ton merchantman.

These successes raised to four the number of vessels struck in the running attack, begun Saturday in stormy weather. Previously an 8000-ton cargo ship was left burning and a 4000-tonner was hit.

Heavy Bombs Fall in France Behind Calais

Great Explosions From Daytime Raid Heard in England

By James M. Long
Associated Press Staff Writer

London, March 14—The heavy thunder of distant explosions from well inland in France behind Calais today signaled the continuance of the air assault on Hitler's western bastion by Allied warplanes, whose motors hummed persistently high over the Dover coast in daylight relays.

In 20 minutes a dozen explosions were so powerful that they rattled doors and windows at Deal, and other sounds believed to be bomb blasts and gunfire across the channel continued for some time.

Several fighter formations were seen returning from the east as the aerial offensive resumed after an overnight lull.

Subsequently it was stated that in fighter sweeps over northern France during the afternoon two enemy planes were destroyed in combat and a number of enemy airfields attacked by bombers. Four British fighters were lost.

The Danish radio station went off the air at 10 p. m., suggesting that squadrons of big British bombers again were on their way to

Foe Threatens To Wipe Out Recent Gains Made by Soviet

By the Associated Press

London, March 14.—The German high command announced tonight in a special communique the recapture of the Ukraine bastion of Kharkov in a great Nazi counter-offensive that has rolled back the Russian southern armies more than 100 miles and now threatens to wipe out a large and important segment of the Red army's winter gains.

Moscow issued its regular midnight bulletin shortly after the Berlin radio's victory broadcast of the Nazi bulletin, datelined "from the Fuehrer's headquarters." Moscow devoted only two paragraphs to the blazing third battle for Kharkov, saying heavy fighting was continuing "in the Kharkov area"—a noncommittal phrase.

Capture No Surprise

Instead the Russians devoted most of their communique to continuing Red army gains on the central front west of Moscow, saying their troops now had crossed the upper Dnieper and Vyazma rivers which could mean that the Red army now is only 65 miles from the Nazi central anchor of Smolensk.

Kharkov had been captured by the Russians February 16 after a 375-mile drive in four months from Stalingrad. It had been in German hands since October 24, 1941.

With the Russians frankly saying that their troops were outnumbered and in dire difficulties, the German announcement did not surprise.

"The counterattack in which the southern army group, after weeks of fighting, threw the enemy back over the Donets was today crowned by an important victory," the brief German special communique said.

"After hard fighting lasting several days, the Waffen SS (elite troops), successfully supported by the Luftwaffe, recaptured the town of Kharkov in an encircling attack from the north and east. The enemy's losses in men and material have not yet been assessed."

Implied Plea for Aid

The only Russian mention of the battle for the great strategic prize in southern Russia was:

"In the Kharkov area heavy fighting continues. Several dozen tanks and over 60 trucks carrying enemy infantry were destroyed by our artillery and antitank rifle fire.

"North of Kharkov our forces waged intensive engagements against enemy infantry and tanks, inflicting severe losses on the Germans."

The Russian communique was recorded by the Soviet monitor, who

Record D. C. Vice Raid Nets 171 in Hotel at Logan Circle

By John Singerhoff,
Post Staff Writer

One hundred seventy-one men and women, including 52 Negro soldiers, were arrested at the Logan Hotel, Logan Circle, yesterday morning in probably the largest vice raid in the city's history.

Led by Maj. Edward J. Kelly, superintendent of police, 93 detectives and patrolmen and at least a dozen military policemen under the direction of Brig. Gen. John T. Lewis, commander of the military district of Washington, crashed into the 90-room hotel and its two annexes at 12:30 a. m.

Dice Game in Progress

The uniformed policemen threw a cordon around the buildings, blocking all doors, while the detectives charged through every room of the establishments. Everyone in the three houses was seized.

In the basement, the raiders reported, a mammoth dice game was in progress. Liquor, wine and beer flowed freely and a supply was confiscated from virtually every room, it was said.

Four men were charged with operating a disorderly house. They posted bail totaling $5000.

Thirty-six Negro couples (most of the men were soldiers), were booked as statutory offenders. Most had posted and forfeited collateral ranging from $10 to $25 last night.

Alleged Proprietor Seized

All the soldiers were turned over to the M. P.'s and were taken to the lockup at the Municipal Center. Those not accused by police were immediately dispatched to their respective camps.

Nicholas Basil Basiliko, 29, of 6817 Georgia Avenue Northwest was named by police as the proprietor of the houses. He was arrested in the 900 block on N Street Northwest, and was one of those charged with operating a disorderly house. The others were:

Robert Patrick Watson, 67, of 500 Rittenhouse Street Northwest, night clerk; George Nathan Miller, Negro, 34, 2216 Eleventh Street Northwest, a laborer, and Sylvester Raymond Hooker, Negro, 27, of the hotel, a cook.

The four will be arraigned at Municipal Court this morning.

Planned like a commando assault, the raid went off without a hitch. The police converged on the place from every side at the prearranged deadline.

All of the officers had met at the guard room at Union Station at 11:30 p. m., believing they were to be a detail to guard an arriving celebrity.

Juke Box Was Blaring

At approximately midnight, Inspector Harvey G. Callahan, police executive officer, read general instructions to the assembled men. Assistant Detective Chief Robert J. Barrett then gave each man detailed instructions of his particular duties during the raid.

Just before the deadline the raiders drew up in automobiles at points all around the neighborhood of the hotel and waited for the hour to strike, then like a thundering herd went into action.

Inside the hotel, Detective Sergt. Roy E. Blick stated, they found two roms filled with couples waiting for accommodations in upstairs bedrooms. A juke box was blaring; a dance had just ended.

Rates at the establishment ranged from $2.50 upward, Blick declared, "and that was just for an hour or so. Some rooms were rented as many as four and five

Entire U.S. Armored Company Cited for Gallantry in Tunisia

By Noland Norgaard
Associated Press Staff Writer

With United States Forces in Tunisia, March 13 (Delayed).—On the same battlefield where only a few weeks ago it helped stem a sudden German attack in one of the most furiously fought actions of the Tunisian campaign, an entire company of a tank-destroyer battalion was commended today for gallant action and six members of the battalion were awarded Silver Stars.

The company, commanded by First Lieut. Ramsey Oakes of Leesville, La., was cited for beating back a German force that flooded through Kasserine Pass on February 20 until United States Infantry could be withdrawn from an exposed position.

"The bravery, keen judgment and skill of the officers and men of this company undoubtedly prevented heavy losses to troops withdrawing along the road, and, in repulsing the German attack, they gained valuable time that was needed to reorganize our troops in the rear," the citation said.

Lieutenant Oakes was one of those decorated with the Silver Star. His citation noted that his company failed to lose a man in the action.

He and the others were taken off-guard by the ceremony, since there had been no advance notice of the awards. Corpl. James Hulsey of Murrayville, Ga., and Pvt. Julian

Income Tax Deadline Tonight; Bureau Open Till Midnight

Today is the final day for filing federal income tax returns.

The Bureau of Internal Revenue, Twelfth Street and Constitution Avenue, will be open from 8:15 a. m. until midnight for those persons filing here. For those persons wishing to mail their returns to Baltimore, the bureau has set the postmark deadline as midnight. A 5 per cent increase on the total tax will be levied against delinquents for each 30-day period beyond today.

All single persons who earned at least $500 last year and all married persons who received more than $1200 must file returns.

More than 68,000 persons filed returns at the local office last week, it was reported. The bureau here has made ample reinforcements to its personnel to handle thousands more today, it was reported. The number of persons that have yet to file returns is undetermined, it was said.

The main City Postoffice reported that about four million dollars, representing money orders and checks sent to the Internal Revenue Bureau, had been deposited in the Treasury Department from the first of March through late yesterday, at which time the money orders were still pouring in. About two-thirds of this amount was registered for the same periods last year.

District income returns are due by April 15, and so are those for Maryland. In Virginia, however, the forms are just being mailed out and are to be returned by November.

Giraud Too Vague, Fighting French Feel

Speech Brings Him Closer to De Gaulle, Spokesman Says

By the Associated Press

London, March 14.—A spokesman of the Fighting French declared today that Gen. Henri Giraud's speech in North Africa "brings Giraud closer to the view of Gen. Charles de Gaulle and the French National Committee, if he means what it implies."

He added, however, that Fighting French leaders were disappointed that Giraud failed to pledge elimination from his North African administration of Marcel Peyrouton, Jean Marie Bergeret and "other well-known Vichy followers."

Giraud's declaration that he was a trustee of the law of the French Republic was termed by the spokesman as "vague, because we are uncertain if he means that the laws of the republic are going to be applied through French North Africa."

"If he does," the spokesman said, "it means quite an advance since Casablanca."

The Fighting French did, however, approve of Giraud's denial of personal ambition after the freedom of France, the spokesman said.

"Giraud did not specifically agree to all our March 13 memorandum conditions for the unification of the French war effort," the spokesman continued.

"He did say he would hold the so-called armistice null and void; he implied again the eventual restoration of the republic and he implied the need for determination of French authority after freedom by means of universal suffrage."

Unofficial British sources said Giraud's address "should go a long way towards healing the breach between Giraud and De Gaulle."

War Sidelights

British Let 'Tank-Buster' Secret Out

By Russell Hill

Copyright 1943, Washington Post and New York Tribune, Inc.

Cairo, March 14.—The secret of the "tank busters," the weapon with which the British in Africa have been attacking German armored units from the air, was made public today. They are Hurricane fighter planes especially equipped with cannon firing armor-piercing shells.

Formations of tank busters have destroyed scores of enemy tanks and armored cars.

Their latest success was scored Wednesday when they came to the aid of fighting forces which were being attacked by a strong German armored column near Ksar Rhilane. Flying in low from several directions, with their guns spitting steel, the tank busters destroyed five enemy tanks and damaged ten motor trucks.

Second Front Demanded

London, March 14 (AP).—Thousands of persons at a meeting under Communist Party auspices in Trafalgar Square today shouted their approval of a resolution urging immediate opening of a second front in Europe.

"For a majority of Londoners the war has almost ceased to exist," declared one speaker, Ted Bramley. "In the past five months, while the Russians were holding the Germans at Leningrad, Stalingrad and Moscow, the people of London have become soft and comfortable."

Gordon Schaffer, political editor of the Sunday News, said the failure of the Allies to open a second front had prevented the Russians from completing their encirclement of Nazi armies in the Donets area.

7 Austrians Executed

Stockholm, March 14 (AP).—The Germans have executed seven Austrian workers for organizing groups which dynamited military trains, barracks and bridges, and ten others, including a woman, for treasonable activity, it is reported from the Austrian provinces of Steiermark and Kaernten.

This brought the number of executions in Austria on the basis of newspaper accounts alone to 104 since November.

Petain Illness Denied

London, March 14 (AP).—A D.N.B. dispatch broadcast by the Berlin radio denied that Marshal Petain had suffered a stroke and said he reviewed a changing of the guard this morning from the balcony of his Vichy residence, the Hotel du Parc.

"He was ni the best of health," said the broadcast.

Benes Optimistic on War

London, March 14 (AP).—President Eduard Benes of the Czecho-Slovak government-in-exile declared today that the Germans' "catastrophic defeats on the Eastern Front are but the beginning of new and decisive defeats they will experience in the whole of Europe this year."

But he warned the Nazis would make desperate attempts "to extort some compromise peace before it is too late."

652 Killed in Sardinia

London, March 14 (AP).—A Rome radio broadcast recorded by the Associated Press said today recent Allied air raids had killed 652 persons in Cagliari, Sardinian port which serves as an Axis air base.

Elation Here on Pledge To End Discrimination

By Richard G. Massock

Associated Press Staff Writer

Gen. Henri Giraud's abolition of all racial discrimination in Algeria was greeted in Washington official circles yesterday as the healthiest symptom manifested in North Africa since American troops landed there to fight the Axis.

As for the portion of Giraud's address pledging himself to the "rules of the French Republic," an authoritative source said he thought it would dispel any doubts that Giraud wanted the people of France left free to choose the democratic form of government desired by them.

The program announced by the high commissioner was regarded by this source, who may not be publicly identified, as a restoration of the liberal traditions of France that prevailed before the 1940 armistice with Germany.

The 1870 decree, which was among those repealed, established a distinction between Moslem and Jewish native residents of Algeria, giving the Jews a more favorable position as against the Moslems. This decree, named for its sponsor, Isaac A. Cremieux, a French Jewish publicist, naturalized the Jews en bloc, automatically giving them French citizenship, something denied the Moslems.

But the Giraud program is interpreted as going further and placing all inhabitants of Algeria—French, Jewish and Moslem—on an equal plane.

Giraud's announcement applied only to Algeria, it was explained, because that North African region is politically a part of France, whereas French Morocco is a protectorate nominally under the sovereignty of its sultan.

There was hope, however, that eventually similar action would be extended to Morocco.

fications yesterday but an Allied communique said today the Germans there were increasing their artillery activity.

(The Algiers radio, in a broadcast recorded in London, said field guns of the British Eighth Army were bombarding the Mareth Line heavily.)

Allied fighters also swept over enemy positions in northern and central Tunisia in spite of bad weather, attacking armored vehicles, downing four enemy fighters and damaging several others. The combined aerial operations cost the Allies ten planes.

Elsewhere in Tunisia, ground activity gave way to a weekend lull as both sides appeared to be girding for a new test of strength.

All evidence pointed to the fact that the Germans still were bringing in tanks, guns and troops for the inevitable showdown. New personnel arrivals were said to represent picked troops and units of crack regiments.

(The London radio, in a broadcast recorded by C. B. S. in New York, quoted a dispatch from its Eighth Army correspondent, saying Gen. Sir Bernard L. Montgomery's "vehicles and weapons are moving up and massing for battle" in southern Tunisia. "All day long traffic is moving through choking clouds of white dust on these French roads," the broadcast said. "The size and strength of the columns have to be seen to be believed.")

French Consolidate

"Southern Algerian French forces continue to organize recently gained positions," the Allied communique said, presumably referring to units moved into central and southern Tunisia.

(The German high command communique said German motor torpedo boats engaged eight Allied warships off the coast of Algeria Friday night, sinking two British destroyers and damaging two others so severly they probably were lost, and escaped without loss to themselves.

(The communique, broadcast by Berlin and recorded by the Associated Press, said quiet reigned on the North African Front nd claimed that German fighter planes dispersed American squadrons in southern Tunisia and shot down 14 planes without a loss.)

also reported another significant Moscow broadcast—an implied plea for an Allied second front in Europe to take some of the Nazi weight off the Red army.

A Soviet information bureau announcement quoted a captured German private as saying that his division was transferred from France recently and that the troops left in France were "too few and too weak to fight large-scale landing forces."

This has been a recurring Russian theme for weeks now, ever since the German began their great counterattack in southern Russia, a push which Moscow says was made possible by the hurried transfer of 12 Nazi divisions of 180,000 men from western Europe.

A total of 375,000 Germans were said by Moscow to be taking part in the drive which pushed the Russians back from the approaches to the Dnieper River after Kharkov was lost to the Nazis last month.

Menace Donets Basin

The Germans now are threatening to reoccupy the entire Donets River Basin southeast of Kharkov. The present battle lines run 170 miles from Kharkov to a point southwest of Voroshilovgrad, Donets industrial center. Large Nazi air forces are aiding in the drive.

A terrific battle is going on in the Izyum sector, 75 miles southeast of Kharkov. The Soviet communique said 16 tanks had been knocked out and more than 800 Germans killed in the last two days there, and the Moscow radio later said the Germans had lost 61 tanks in five days in a continuing struggle.

But the Berlin radio commentator, Capt. Ludwig Sertorius, said Marshal Gregory Zhukov's crack tank armies had been wiped out southwest of Izyum in order to pave the way for Kharkov's recapture.

The Nazi commentator said Kharkov's fall was "not the termination of the big German counteroffensive."

The Germans also claimed today the recapture of Borisovka 20 miles west of Belgorod in the sector northwest of Kharkov, and Nazi troops also still hold a bridgehead in the western Caucasus based on Novorossisk.

The Moscow announcement saying that German defenses in the west had been denuded quoted the German prisoner as saying that his regiment, the 585th of the 320th Division, had been holding a defense line 25 to 30 miles wide south of Cherbourg.

Emplacements on this line were spaced at mile intervals and garrisoned only by 30 men with 2 machineguns, he was said to have told his Russian captors.

On the central front the Russians announced continuing successes in the drive to knock out Smolensk, 230 miles west of Moscow. Here the Red Army was displaying its offensive power despite stubborn Nazi resistance, in contrast to the purely defensive fight by the Red Army on the Kharkov Donets Basin line.

The communique said the Red Army had forced the upper Dnieper River, which crosses the Vyasma-Smolensk road at a point 35 miles west of Vyazma, dislodging the Germans and killing several hundred of them.

This indicated that the Russians now were only 65 miles from Smolensk on the east, while another Russian column striking down from the northeastern Bely sector was less than 80 miles from the Nazi stronghold.

Strike Toward Rail Link

Several dozen localities southwest of Vyazma also fell to the Russian armies, and this indicated that the Red Army was striking toward the railway linking Smolensk with Bryansk, 150 miles to the southeast.

The toppling of Smolensk would partly nullify Russian reverses in the south and reduce the German danger to Moscow. That Nazi threat has been acute ever since the original 1941 drive that reached the gates of the Soviet capital.

Kharkov has been under assault by waves of Stuka dive-bombers for days now, and the central part of the city is in ruins.

When the Germans first took Kharkov in the fall of 1941, the Russians said it cost them more than 100,000 casualties. The Red Army itself destroyed part of the city in its retreat, and then again had to blast its way into the important rail center last month.

Useful as Springboard.

Kharkov's importance lies in its usefulness as a springboard for further offensives, by the Germans or Russians, in the spring and summer. It is the rail hub for all southern Russia, and once was an industrial colossus.

When the Russians rewon it last month they declared they had smashed Hitler's picked SS elite troops. In announcing its recapture, Berlin specifically lauded the SS troops.

Russian communiques have set Nazi losses at more than one-half million in the Stalingrad expedition alone.

The Vichy broadcast, recorded by the Associated Press, also quoted Goebbels as telling foreign journalists that Germany would repay Britain for the air raids on Germany "in the same currency."

"We do not ask for pity which we do not need," Goebbels said.

Giraud Pledges French Republic Restoration

men" from North African life. Giraud apparently meant by this statement the ousting of pro-Vichy officeholders, and Gen. Jean Marie Bergeret and Gen. Auguste Nogues, who have been heavily criticized for pro-Vichy leanings, were conspicuously absent from the meeting.

5. A pledge to the "People of France that their sacred rights to choose a provisional government themselves will be fully safeguarded."

It was understood that formal decrees carrying out these reforms are now being drafted.

Similar to De Gaulle's Offer

Thus, speaking from a stage draped with flags of Britain, the United States and France, Giraud laid down the framework of the government based on the principles of the Atlantic Charter and on the laws of the French Republic which could embrace all Frenchmen outside France if put into effect.

"For my part," said Giraud in his offer to cooperate with De Gaulle, leader of the Fighting French, "I am ready to cooperate with all those who, accepting the fundamental and traditional principles of which I have spoken, join in the solemn pledge which I am giving the French people who are taking part in the struggle against the enemy."

The offer was greatly similar to De Gaulle's offer in a speech Friday.

Giraud was flanked by Murphy, MacMillan, Gov. Marcel Peyrouton of Algeria and Gov. Gen. Pierre Boisson of French West Africa, on the platform of the Algiers Opera House as he spoke. Present also were the grand mufti of Algiers and prominent caids in flowing robes.

Servant of the People

The general declared his aims included driving the invaders from the French homeland and the restoration of the Chamber of Deputies, and he said elections for that chamber would be held as soon as France was freed by Allied forces, including the troops he commands.

The most interesting part of the speech to most observers was Giraud's pledge to govern North Africa according to decree of the prewar French republic, and to relinquish leadership as soon as France is freed.

"I give the most solemn assurance to the people of France that their sacred right to choose their provisional Government themselves will be fully safeguarded, Giraud said. "I am the servant of the French people. I am not their leader."

"All Frenchmen who are with me, all of them from myself to the last soldier of the army of victory, are servants of the people of France. Tomorrow we shall be servants of the provisional government which they will have freely chosen, and we undertake to deliver to it our powers."

In line with this was his declaration that "municipal assemblies and consuls general will resume their traditional role, with their members elected by the people."

While these consuls general presumably are free to advise Giraud, he will continue to rule by decree.

Yesterday the Fighting French National Committee issued in London a 1600-word statement addressed to General Giraud in which it suggested four "indispensable" conditions to obtain unification of the French war effort.

The De Gaullists held that the "so-called armistice" and the creation of the "French state" must be considered void; that republican legality must be reestablished and fundamental liberty and equality restored; that "no doubt should remain as to the determination of any French authority" to provide for elections after the liberation.

Giraud touched, directly or indirectly, upon all these points.

"Alsace and Lorraine have been incorporated into Germany. No voice was raised in France to protest this," he said. "We protest. France does not accept that annexation. Alsace and Lorraine will be French again."

"As long as the wind of misfortune blows over the country, in each village heroic France rises against sevitude," he said.

"The people of France have not accepted the armistice. They have been helped by the heroic resistance of the English people, who fought alone against the common enemy.

"I am happy to proclaim that following the Casablanca conversations I have found the most loyal partners.

"All France will share with her Allies the victory of the cause. France will regain her place among the victorious nations. The French will again become masters of their destiny.

"The French people will then form their provisional government according to the constitutional laws of the government. The expression of the sovereignty of the French people has been interrupted by the occupation.

"I am the servent of the French people.

"The French people have been forbidden from expressing an opinion.

"Measures have been taken to reestablish the French tradition. New needs must be satisfied.

"Municipal assemblies will regain their traditional role.

"Race laws imposed by the Nazis on France will no longer be imposed. Without equality there is no French liberty.

"The Germans and Italians have shown how they treat non-Aryans. France will assure them security. I have confidence in the good sense of all.

"In that spirit, we will administer the possesions of France. We will preserve intact her territories.

"France will finish the war as a victorious nation. France will become spiritually the France of old times. Peace will bring its ideal.

"A better Europe, a Europe of peace will be built. The French will be united and free.

"I wish with all my heart the union of all of us. The union must be effected. That union is indispensable.

"Disunity is a sign of defeat. Unity is a sign of victory. I should like to cooperate with all those who accept the traditional principles.

"Permit me to ask God that victory be close at hand. And that men of good will be permitted to live, understanding one another."

Giraud Quotes Lincoln In World Broadcast

New York, March 14 (AP)—Gen. Henri Giraud, French African leader, quoted from Lincoln's Gettysburg address today in his broadcast from Algiers. Paying tribute to the patriots and saboteurs resisting the German occupation, to hostages, to deported Frenchmen and those who have died for liberty, he remarked:

"As Lincoln said at Gettysburg:

"'The world will little note, nor long remember what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here.'"

We mean those vacant spots left in the rear of many Street Cars and Buses, during the busy part of the day, by riders who fail to move to the rear. Next time you get on a Street Car or Bus, glance back to the rear as you get on. The odds are pretty good that you will find vacant spaces. There may be seats. At all times, move as far back in the Car or Bus as you can. It will aid others to board or alight quickly, and speed your ride and theirs. In these days of gas and rubber restrictions it is of the utmost importance that you cooperate with your fellow riders.

Eden Interviews Knox and Stimson

Addresses Troops

U. S. Unity At Peak, Says Spellman

By the Associated Press

Algiers, March 14.—Archbishop Francis J. Spellman of New York told American forces in North Africa in an address broadcast over the Algiers radio today that "never before in our history have Americans been more fervently united, not only in love for our country, but in our faith for our destiny and our determination to do our utmost for victory."

"Our war aims and our peace aims are no secret," said the archbishop, who came here recently from Vatican City, where he held several conferences with Pope Pius XII.

"They have been stated again and again with the utmost clarity. As President Roosevelt has said, we mean no harm to the common people of the Axis nations.

"Our commander in chief has told us that our soldiers in Tunisia are well trained. We can be sure they will conduct themselves bravely and efficiently. Thus we are assured of victory."

The archbishop told the American troops that they were an example to their countrymen in "the firm belief in the justice of our struggle against a combination of aggressors" and in "the supreme faith in victory."

"We Americans ardently desire to retain our freedom, our own form of government, our right to live, to worship, to work, to assemble, to trade, to express ourselves, to defend ourselves, to live at peace with God and with our neighbors," Spellman said.

The archbishop, military vicar of the armed forces of the United States, told the soldiers and sailors that the objectives of the United Nations were 'in accord with the Christian life and the elocutions of his holiness, Pope Pius XII."

Spellman indicated that he planned to remain in North Africa several days more and disclosed that he had traveled more than 2000 miles since his arrival on the continent more than two weeks ago.

Visitor Exchanges Views on Existing Military Situation

By L. W. Meredith

Washington Bureau of Chicago Sun

Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden of Great Britain yesterday got down to the business of "a general exchange of views" with United States officials, which brought him flying to this country, by plunging into military situation problems.

The number two man of the British Cabinet, second only to Prime Minister Winston Churchill, spent his first Sunday in Washington, following his arrival Friday night, in conferences with:

Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson, whom Eden visited during the forenoon at the 75-year-old Secretary's residence.

Secretary of the Navy Frank Knox, who conferred with Eden at the British Embassy during the afternoon.

Col. John J. Llewellin, chairman of the British Supply Commission in the United States.

Neither the Secretary of War nor the Secretary of the Navy had any comment to make after the conferences, and the foreign secretary was equally uncommunicative.

Nor was there any statement forthcoming from the British Embassy, except the bare information concerning the conferences with the two chiefs of the American armed forces, and the British supply chairman.

It was emphasized that the foreign secretary's visit to the United States is a "state job," which, a spokesman said, "means just plain work."

Eden's visit has not been worked out on a day-to-day schedule basis as yet, and no program had been arranged at a late hour last night for today.

"Conferences will be held as they fit into necessity and convenience," the embassy spokesman explained. "The Secretary expects to see and confer with many people. He hopes to visit many of the departments engaged in war activities. And later, if time permits, he hopes to see some of the main production centers."

Frequent meetings are expected to be held with President Roosevelt, Secretary of State Cordell Hull and Undersecretary Sumner Welles.

The British Information Office, meanwhile, sought to tone down the focusing of attention in some circles on the Russian political situation in regard to the international postwar aspect.

The presence of William Strang, Assistant Undersecretary of State in the Foreign Office, in the Eden party was emphasized in some quarters because Strang participated in the 1939 Franco-British-Soviet talks in Moscow, and has had considerable contact with British-Soviet diplomacy.

The information office said that Strang's presence was "purely incidental," stating that he would not have accompanied Eden had not his superior, Sir Alex Cadogan, secretary of state for the foreign office, been taken ill with influenza. Strang, the spokesman said, was "just substituting" for Sir Alex.

"While it is true that Mr. Strang has had considerable Russian experience," the spokesman said, "his position is much broader, and covers all fields."

The embassy's emphasis on the "state job" character of the foreign secretary's visit put a damper on whatever hopes the socially ambitious of the National Capital might have had in the way of parties and receptions.

"There will be no time for parties," the embassy spokesman said.

U.S. Airmen Bomb Kiska Again; Pacific Island Bases Raided

Air raids on Japanese bases in the Aleutians and in the Solomons have been continued, the Navy reported yesterday, without loss of any United States aircraft.

Warhawk fighters, taking advantage of breaks in the weather Friday and Saturday, bombed and strafed enemy installations at Kiska in the western Aleutians. No results were reported.

A night raid by heavy Liberator bombers Friday night (Solomons time) started a large fire in the area occupied by the enemy at Ballale in the Shortland Islands. Other raids were made by Liberators the same night on Kahili in the Shortlands and on Vila and Munda in the Central Solomons.

The following morning, Dauntless dive bombers escorted by Wildcat fighters, followed the Liberators over Vila and scored bomb hits which caused "heavy explosions and smoke." Text of Navy communique No. 309:

"North Pacific

"1. During the afternoons of March 12 and 13, Warhawk fighters (Curtis P-40) bombed and strafed Japanese positions at Kiska.

"South Pacific (all dates are East Longitude)

"2. During the night of March 12-13, Liberator heavy bombers carried out minor bombing attacks against Japanese positions at Kahili and Ballale in the Shortland Island area, and at Vila and Munda in the central Solomons. Hits in the enemy area at Ballale started a large fire.

"3. During the morning of March 13, Dauntless dive-bombers (Douglas), with Wildcat escort (Grumman F4F) attacked Japanese positions at Vila on Kolombangara Island. Bomb hits caused heavy explosions and smoke in the target area.

"4. No U. S. planes were lost in any of the above actions."

Missing Son Prisoner Of War, Herring Thinks

By the Associated Press

Clyde L. Herring, OPA official and former Democratic Senator from Iowa, said last night he "assumed" his son, Capt. Clyde E. Herring, to be a prisoner of war.

Captain Herring, an infantry intelligence officer, is listed officially as missing on the Tunisian front.

His father, who has conducted his own investigation since the action of February 17, said he found out that the captain was "out in front" with his regimental commander, who also has been reported missing.

The former Senator said he had received "hundreds of letters" from parents of boys from the Middlewest who had been reported missing in the same action.

Nazis Go After French Rebels With Grenades

By the Associated Press

Nazi guards in France are using tear gas and hand grenades in an attempt to dislodge Frenchmen who are hiding out in the hills to escape compulsory labor in Germany, the British radio declared yesterday in a broadcast to Europe which quoted Swiss sources.

Other European broadcasts reported continued violence against Axis occupation forces in Yugoslavia and indicated that guerilla activity by Greek partisans on the island of Crete had been intensified.

The British broadcast said large groups of French patriots, hiding in the hills of the Haute Savoie region, were offering strong resistance.

Another broadcast reported constant heavy fighting was going on in the Sarajevo district of Yugoslavia, between Yugoslav guerillas and German and Italian occupation troops.

This broadcast said several large battles had taken place on the Sarajevo-Mostar line, along the Neretva River, with Yugoslav patriots blowing up underpasses and railway bridges and destroying several kilometers of highway.

"In Dalmatia and Slovenia," the broadcast was quoted, "there is also heavy fighting. Slovene freedom fighters derailed two German trains and blew up three bridges."

The Moscow radio quoted Istanbul sources as reporting that Greek and Yugoslav partisan detachments had formed a junction and that Greek patriots were giving Italian and German troops increased trouble on Crete.

The Moscow broadcast said Greek partisans "are, in fact, dominating the central parts of the island" and that "transport is possible only by sea."

The Swiss newspaper, Tribune de Geneve, commenting on the manhunt in eastern France Saturday, said a tension similar to that of the outbreak of the war was sweeping France.

Ickes Wants Nazis Told They Face Law Of 'Eye for an Eye'

Boston, March 14 (AP).—Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior, declared tonight that "it is about time that the democracies remind the Nazis that the ancient Biblical law of an 'eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth' will be invoked against them."

In an address prepared for delivery at a dinner of the New England Jewish National Fund Council, sponsor of a Massachusetts colony in Palestine, Ickes said:

"When the time comes to settle the minorities' problem of Europe, the Jews should receive the same justice as other European minorities. Once and for all, we must put an end to the 'refugee' problem that is an outrage upon the conscience of mankind. To condemn human beings to the status and condition of 'refugees' is a most horrible crime against civilization."

3 Heroic Fliers Cited for Saving Big Bomber

It took three men to fly the big Liberator, but that was not remarkable since two of them were wounded and the other never had flown that type of ship before. To make it worse, the Liberator was shot all to pieces and most of the crew were wounded.

The three young men got the Distinguished Flying Cross for their feat. They were:

First Lieut. Howard N. Young, 26, of Berkeley, Calif., the pilot, who took the bomber over the target in spite of a shattered arm.

Second Lieut. Anthony C. Yenalavage, 24, of Kingston, Pa., the bombardier, who flew the bomber back to its base after letting his bombs go, although he never had flown a Liberator.

Second Lieut. Cleveland D. Hickman, 21, of Albany, Calif., the co-pilot, who was too badly wounded to fly the airplane himself but sat alongside Yenalavage and told him what to do.

Shell Wrecks Cockpit

Loaded with bombs for a target in continental Europe, the four-motored ship took off from an airdrome in England, the War Department related yesterday, and joined a formation headed east. As soon as they crossed the Channel, enemy fighters swarmed up to intercept them and a cannon shell exploded in the pilot cockpit.

It shattered Young's right arm and badly wounded Hickman and made a mess of the cockpit.

But the big Liberator still flew, and Young stayed with it. More waves of fighters raked the bomber again and again. Other members of the crew were wounded at their gun stations, and the Liberator was so badly shot up it barely flew. Young kept it in formation and made the bombing run and Yenalavage dropped his bombs.

Bombardier Takes Over

Then Hickman took over and Yenalavage dressed Young's arm as best he could. When that was finished, he climbed into Young's seat and took over the controls. They kept in formation until they were in sight of England. Then Yenalavage pulled away from the formation, because the weather had become bad, and flew on alone until he landed the plane, coached by Hickman.

Their citations read:

For Young: "His presence of mind, great personal courage, indomitable will and deep devotion to his crew members and to his duty, so amply displayed upon this occasion, are inspiring and reflect much credit upon this officer and uphold the highest traditions of the armed forces of the United States."

For Hickman: "His excellent judgment and his determination to 'carry on' against all odds, saved the airplane from complete destruction and in all probability saved the lives of the crew."

For Yenalavage: "The courage, initiative and unerring judgment displayed upon this occasion uphold the highest traditions of the Army Air Forces and reflect great credit upon this young officer and the armed forces of the United States."

Grade Crossing Deaths Up Despite Less Auto Traffic

Despite curtailed use of automobiles, more persons were killed at railroad grade crossings last year than in 1941, Joseph B. Eastman said yesterday in calling for greater caution.

The director of defense transportation issued a statement commending the National Safety Council's current campaign to "save manpower for warpower."

Eastman reported an estimated 2000 persons were killed and more than 4600 injured in 1942 grade crossing accidents. He did not give the 1941 figures.

"The reason why fatalities at grade crossings rose when fatalities in other accidents involving automobiles declined is not hard to find," he explained. "The railroads last year were running many more troop trains, many more freight trains, than normally.

"In other words, it was 'train time' at the Nation's 230,000 grade crossings far more frequently than ever before."

5 Die as Bomber Plunges Into Bay

Tampa, Fla., March 14 (AP).—Three officers and two non-commissioned men were killed Saturday as their medium bomber crashed in the bay nea. St. Petersburg, Fla.

The dead are First Lieut. Allan M. Okell, pilot, of Crawford, N. J.; First Lieut. Francis P. Martin, co-pilot, of Mountain Grove, Me.; Second Lieut. Roy A. Skow, observer, of Omaha, Neb.; Staff Sergt. Archie E. Dively, engineer, of Claysburg, Pa., and Staff Sergt. Reginald R. Reynolds, of Lueders, Tex.

Fire Damages Lorton Equipment

Fire of undetermined origin in the electric shop at the Lorton Reformatory yesterday did damage estimated at $500 to equipment and the building.

The prison's own fire fighting apparatus fought the blaze and had it virtually under control when firemen arrived from the Occoquan Fire Department. Ray L. Huff, superintendent of District penal institutions, said no one was injured

5 From Maryland And Virginia Held Prisoners by Japs

The War Department yesterday released names of 257 United States soldiers who are being held prisoners of war by the Japanese in the Philippines from the Washington area.

Reported captives to next of kin were the following Maryland men: Pvt. Leo L. Fisher, Brooklyn, and Private First Class George Lane, Riverdale.

Virginia men—Pvt. John A. Harris, Richmond; Pvt. William F. Hawkins, Edinburg, and Pvt. Charles F. Mott, jr., Norfolk.

Coroner Probes Death of Inmate

The coroner last night was investigating the death of Mrs. Myrtle E. McNelly, 33, an inmate of St. Elizabeths Hospital, who was found hanging from a window grate at the hospital yesterday.

She was suspended from an improvised rope made from her dress and slip, police reported, and was dead at 10:55 a. m. when cut down by hospital attendants.

times a night and for as much as $4," he said.

Chief of Washington's vice squad, Blick had had undercover investigators in the hotel for six months. The raid was carried out through a Municipal Court warrant.

He said the majority of couples found in the establishment were soldiers on leave and their girl friends, and young couples, most of whom are Government employes, who took rooms "for petting parties."

A crowd estimated at 2000 gathered in front of the hotel while the raid was in progress. A detail of traffic policemen was needed to keep automobiles and taxicabs moving. At least a score of couples applied for rooms while the raid was under way.

Seventeen patrol wagon loads were carried to nearly every precinct of the city. Within a few hours police had "weeded out" unoffenders and they were released. Others obtained their releases on collateral throughout the day.

Only two of the women seized were known prostitutes, Blick said.

A detail of policemen left at the scene afterward reported that up until 5 a.m. more than 200 couples appeared at the hotel for rooms.

Part of Campaign

Detective Blick characterized the raid as another in the District's campaign to rid the city of disorderly houses which are said to have stricken scores of soldiers and other men with venereal disease.

Though he would not verify a report that the Army ordered the cleanup, the fact that General Lewis was present indicated the military is striving wholeheartedly to eradicate all possible sources of infection here.

Last week the vice squad with the FBI raided the Hopkins Institute, at 2701 Connecticut Avenue Northwest, a massage parlor described as "one of the most notorious call houses in the East."

Armored Company Cited in Tunisia

Wilson of La Fayette, Ga., both turned pale and trembled when the commanding general called them from the ranks to receive their medals.

It was a reversal of the form they had shown in battle, when they raced 100 yards through the dark under intense enemy crossfire to wipe out a machine-gun nest that was preventing the proper placing of their platoon. After covering half the distance the two men found the enemy was firing heavily directly at them, but they continued on to with 15 yards of their objective and then wiped out the post with hand grenades.

Others awarded Silver Stars were from other companies, Capt. Noble Abney, who, like Oakes, comes from Leesville, La., was cited for moving his company into an open area under heavy enemy shelling so it could cover the withdrawal of the American infantry and then lending the infantry vehicles to assist in the retreat. Abney's action was credited with having saved a substantial portion of the infantry, which might otherwise have been overrun.

Corpl. Alex Steinberg of Newark, N. J., was decorated for his heroism in dismounting from a vehicle on the fireswept battlefield and carrying a wounded man to safety.

Another Lieutenant Decorated

The other Silver Star went to Second Lieut. John Foos of Gibsonburg, Ohio, for gallantry in driving 2 miles ahead of his mortar platoon in a light truck to determine enemy positions. German machine guns blasted at him, one bullet creasing his helmet and another knocking the bayonet off his rifle, which was beside him in the car.

Foos returned to his platoon with information that enabled it to silence German guns and permit American infantry to advance without difficulty.

The citation for Oakes' company came as a result of one of the most spectacular episodes of Marshal Rommel's recent push through Kasserine Pass. The company, part of a battalion commanded by Lieut. Col. Charley Eastburn of Meridian, Miss., was assigned to hold a road above the pass.

Expected relief failed to arrive by midnight, and two hours later the company heard troops approaching. It was unable to establish the identity of the force until it was only 50 yards away. Then it blasted away, destroying three German armored vehicles, wiping out two machinge-gun squads and compelling the survivors to retreat.

Only yesterday, Oakes' gunners rushed to their .50 caliber guns when they saw four Messerschmitts coming and shot one of them out of the sky.

Prewar Film Exhibit

Heavy Bombs Rain On Inland France

Germany tonight.

Hit-back forays by Focke-Wulf 190's caused several casualties in East Anglia. Four persons were killed in one town when a bomb smashed a home, and a low-ceiling raider splattered the streets with machine-gun bullets. Two persons were killed on a road in a neighboring town.

The R. A. F. confined itself to laying mines in enemy waters last night, marking a temporary interruption in the day-and-night aerial pounding of Germany and occupied Europe, but this reinvasion bombing offensive has operated on 65 of the 73 days of this year.

It was only the second night in nearly three weeks that one or more Nazi cities or military bases had not rocked from high-explosive bombs, and it followed a day in which high-flying American heavy bombers pounded the strategic German-held railway junction at Amiens, France, and the Friday night attack by the R. A. F. on Essen's Krupp works with more than 1000 tons of explosives.

Today's Air Ministry communique, briefest for many days, said merely that "last night aircraft of the bomber command laid mines in enemy waters. Three of our aircraft are missing."

Failure of the R. A. F.'s great fleet of night bombers to continue their shattering attack could have been attributable either to poor flying weather over the English Channel, as it was on the last previous occasion they remained in their hangars, or it could indicate gathering of forces for even more devastating assaults.

Last night's mine-laying expedition apparently was to German Baltic waters. The Berlin radio said in a broadcast recorded by the Associated Press that British planes had flown over that area without dropping bombs nad that two of them had been shot down.

Schools' Jeep Drive

The handicapped children of Gallinger Hospital have built their own stamp booth as part of the drive by elementary and high school students to provide the Army with 99 jeeps—at $900 a jeep—by Minute Man Day, April 19.

Schools from every section in Washington have enrolled in the drive, and are being paced thus far by Brightwood elementary school whose students opened their campaign at noon Thursday and by Friday their sales amounted to $1987.20.

Senate Group Ready to Vote On Allred Issue

terday he believed that if Congress should pass the Bankhead farm workers deferment bill "President Roosevelt would veto it as being unfair in the extreme to which it has gone." The measure, Tydings contended, would exempt from military service all farm workers, "regardless of the amount of food they produce, or regardless of the fact a replacement may be available," and called this "indiscriminate class legislation."

The bill was before the Senate all last week while various amendments and substitutes were considered. Two remain to be acted on—an amendment by Senator Downey (Democrat) of California, to freeze all transportation workers in their jobs in labor shortage areas and a substitute by Senator Pepper (Democrat) of Florida, establishing a mobile emergency workers corps to meet pressing labor shortages in any locality. It would be financed by a 300 million-dollar appropriation.

The measure to nullify President Roosevelt's order limiting all salaries to $25,000 after taxes was passed by the House last week by more than a two-thirds majority and Senator Johnsor (Democrat) of Colorado of the Finance Committee predicted yesterday that the Senate would approve it or a simila bill by an equally wide margin, which would be sufficient to override a Presidential veto if the issue came to that.

Debt Now 114 Billions

Since the repealer is attached to legislation increasing the statutory debt limit from 125-billion to 220 billion dollars, Johnson expressed the view that a veto was unlikely. The national debt stood near 114 billion dollars, exclusive of guaranteed obligations March 1, and the Treasury plans a new 15 billion-dollar financing drive to start April 12.

The bill, drafted by Representative Disney (Democrat) of Oklahoma, provides in effect that salaries which exceeded $25,000 before December 7, 1941, could not be reduced by Government order, but that salaries which were below that figure then could not rise above $25,000 now.

The House Ways and Means Committee is to ask the Rules Committee this week to chart the procedure for handling a new tax collection bill. The measure, as framed by the Ways and Means Committee, calls for a withholding tax of 20 per cent of taxable income at the source and offers small discounts to induce taxpayers to put themselves on a current payment basis by remitting two years' taxes in one year.

There was some speculation, the Associated Press reported, that the Ways and Means group might ask for procedure under which no amendments other than those proposed by the committee could be considered. Such a course could block any attempt by Republicans to substitute the Ruml "skip-a-year's-tax system.

and New York.

Horace H. Herr, secretary of the National League of Wholesale Fresh Fruit and Vegetable Distributors, emphasizing that he did not know what adjustments had been made, said:

"If their general effect is to bring prices here more in line with those at other markets, they will, of course, help Washington."

Further than that, no one was willing to go. One thing was certain. Whatever improvement is effected, there will be no return to normality. The Florida freeze, transportation difficulties and the needs of the armed services preclude such a possibility.

The vegetables covered by the new price ceilings are lettuce, spinach, carrots, green peas, snap beans, tomatoes and cabbage.

Japs Massing 600 Miles Off Australia

last seen was blazing from stem to stern," today's bulletin said, while the smaller vessel, subsequently identified as a tanker, is now believed to have been sunk.

All Allied planes returned from the attack.

The reference to a gathering concentration of Japanese ships at Ambon, 600 miles northwest of Darwin, recalled a high command statement two weeks ago that the Japanese were reinforcing their troops in a 2000-mile island perimeter "enveloping the upper half of Australia," which the communique at that time said indicated the enemy "is taking up a position in readiness."

It was about that time that Lieut. Gen. George C. Kenney, Allied aerial commander, and Maj. Gen. Richard K. Sutherland, chief of staff for General MacArthur, left Australia to go to Washington. The purpose of their visit has not been made known here. (Washington reports have suggested that both Allied generals were going to ask that more planes and equipment be sent to the Australian theater.)

A Dutch Naval Base

Ambon on Amboina Island in the Banda Sea is a big Dutch naval base which the enemy seized early in the war.

South of Ambon the Japanese also hold valuable bases on Timor, a Dutch and Portuguese possession before its fall. Allied troops still are reported holding out in its hinterland.

Although the Allies frequently have attacked Japanese positions on both islands, most of the fighting has been confined to the sector northeast of Australia—the New Guinea, New Britain and Solomon areas.

The Bismarck Sea fight in which the Allies sank 22 Japanese ships, wiped out approximately 15,000 troops aboard them, and knocked down scores of Japanese planes, was fought in the ocean lanes between New Britain and New Guinea.

The present fight to annihilate the 8 convoy vessels is being fought farther north and to the west along a section of the New Guinea coast above the Lae-Salamaua positions of the enemy. Wewak is about 370 miles north of the big Allied base of Port Moresby, which is on the southern side of New Guinea.

Raids on Europe Prove U. S. Bombers

Despite the criticism you may hear of American planes, U. S. airmen who have studied the current bombings of Europe, says privately that one American bomber is worth five of the British.

American planes are heavily armed and heavily armored. Able to protect themselves, they operate in the daylight, with precision bombing, whereas the British planes, flying at night, must lay down a pattern of bombs over a whole area, hoping that the principal target will be hit.

British planes can carry a heavier load of bombs, but the fewer bombs carried by the American planes are more effective because they go straight to the target.

Further, American planes have suffered fewer losses proportionately than the British, both operational and combat losses.

In fact the American contribution is so important that the all-out bombing of Germany must await the availability of more United States planes.

Most people think there is a heavy concentration of American planes in England now, and that the current round-the-clock bombings are the big show. Neither is correct.

There was a concentration of United States planes in England last summer and fall, made with intended publicity. This had the effect of sending the Nazis scurrying all over western Europe to mend their defenses. Then United States air strength was pulled out of England for the mission it had been intended for—the invasion of North Africa.

United States air strength in England is now built up again, and when the time comes, the two air forces combined will stage the show intended to knock Germany out of the war.

Ladies of the Army

WHEN ladies were first brought into the Army, an aide jokingly warned Secretary of War Stimson that if he weren't careful the WAACS eventually would want to run the War Department.

That prediction has not yet come to pass, but the WAACS today are getting rebellious at old line Army officers and the cuspidor atmosphere of recruiting stations.

Trouble is that when recruiting was stopped in the Army, the Army's regular recruiting officers were transferred to the WAACS. And under their old-fashioned methods, the WAACS now must boost their present strength of 42,000 to their authorized strength of 150,000; later to 375,000, the new strength to be authorized by Congress. This will be three times the size of the prewar regular Army.

Meanwhile, under male domination, recruiting goes down not up. In Springfield, Mass., two WAAC officers in charge of recruiting chafe under a colonel who lays down the rule that they may not appear singly, but only together, on the streets of the city. This cuts their effectiveness in half.

In cities such as Hartford and St. Louis, WAAC officers would like to be free to do a selling job, but they are hindered by old-line officers who still labor under the impression that this is a man's Army: WAACS complain that they have to sit under the nose of their male superior, who even listens in on their telephone conversations.

Cigar Smoke, Cuspidors

WAACS say they don't fear going into battle, but that even the bravest girls are frightened off by the cigar-smoke-and-cuspidor atmosphere of the typical Army recruiting station in the basement of the postoffice building.

In Washington, WAAC officers asked for clerical recruiting assistance and got four men who had just joined the Army and had no training whatever. So the women took the men in hand and taught them military customs, including how to salute.

Weak spots in WAAC recruiting are New England, New York, St. Louis, Omaha and the South generally. Chivalrous Southern fathers hesitate to let their daughters go off to war.

NOTE—Many WAAC officers are women who have been successful in business, and have earned more than the Regular Army colonels and majors they serve under.

Willkie's Hat in Ring

FOR a long time friends of Wendell Willkie have been urging him to begin organizing now if he wanted the Republican nomination in 1944. But he has stalled them off, either not decided whether he wanted to run again, or else figuring that he could repeat what he did at Philadelphia in 1940—take the convention by storm.

Now, however, the sub-rosa activity of Willkie's friends indicates that the die is cast.

They have been quietly sounding out Republican leaders in various States on the idea of pledged delegations for Willkie at the 1944 G. O. P. Convention. Considerable progress has been made in Indiana, where Ralph Gates, Republican State Chairman, who plans to run for Governor next year, is lending an attentive ear to proposals for a lineup with Willkie.

The 1940 G. O. P. standard-bearer also can count on the potent support of Grace Reynolds, Republican national committeewoman from Indiana, who arranged for his address to a cheering, overflow audience of Republican women's club members in Indianapolis last month.

In New Hampshire, however, Willkie has struck a snag. Senator Styles Bridges, certain to be a "favorite son" candidate at the 1944 convention, is opposed to pledged delegations.

Bridges Objects

THOUGH friendly with Willkie in the past, Bridges wants New Hampshire Republicans to follow their traditional policy of sending unpledged delegates to the convention.

In Indiana, a resolution inviting him to address the G. O. P.-controlled Legislature at first was violently opposed by leaders of the Legislature. The old-line chiefs, typical of G. O. P. leaders in the party generally, were against him. However, popular pressure forced them to back down and consent to adoption of the resolution.

In a followup speech to the Republican women's clubs that night, Willkie took the place by storm. Actually Willkie made two speeches to the G. O. P. ladies. In the first, which was broadcast, he extolled the virtues of Abraham Lincoln and pleaded for national unity behind the war effort. The second speech was delivered after he went off the air and was political with a capital "P." Amid roars of approval from his listeners, Willkie scathingly denounced the Roosevelt Administration, declared the only hope for democracy rested with the Republican Party.

The rescue of Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker and his party from their drifting liferaft last November 12 has earned the Air Medal for Lieut. William F. Eadie, 29.

"Placing the most severely injured man in the cockpit of his small plane, and lashing the others to the wings, he taxied toward his base 40 miles away, until given assistance by a passing ship," the citation related.

Taft Charges Davis Usurps Radio's Time

Senator Taft (Republican), Ohio, declared yesterday that "it is both an abuse of power and an insult to the intelligence of the American people and to the abilities of our free press and radio workers for Elmer Davis, chief of the Office of War Information, to commandeer all the radio stations of the United States regularly in his series of propaganda broadcasts.

Davis, who began a series of weekly radio talks Friday night, denied that he broadcast any propaganda or commandeered any stations, and said that stations are free to present other programs at the time of his broadcasts if they wish.

Taft said in a statement:

"I shall be interested in discovering by what authority, or pressure, Mr. Davis is able to command time on the four radio networks simultaneously and virtually say to the people that they must listen to him or turn off their radios.

"There was not one word said by Mr. Davis in his first broadcast that he could not have depended on the regular radio newscasters, the commentators and the newspaper writers to explain adequately to the country.

"Both the radio and the newspapers have given the fullest cooperation to the Government in explaining the war effort. Here in Washington, Mr. Davis has at his call the finest corps of correspondents in the world. And the only confusion in the interpretation of war activities has been within the Government itself, or where the tendency toward censorship has made the facts unavailable.

"There is no excuse in the world for Mr. Davis to usurp their functions or assume that he must go over their heads to the people. That is, unless Mr. Davis has a more subtle propaganda program for the future than was revealed in his first broadcast."

Davis replied when asked to comment:

"We didn't commandeer any chains or stations. We put on the broadcast for anybody that wanted it and tried to adjust the time to make it most convenient for everybody.

"We didn't have all four networks. The Mutual broadcast it next day at a time more convenient to it and I understand the Blue carried Mr. Knox (Secretary of the Navy) until he was through, so that it cut three or four minutes off my talk.

"Any local station on the chains is at liberty to put on a local program at the time of the broadcasts if it wants to.

"And if Mr. Taft will point out any propaganda I'll greatly appreciate it."

Hoover to Give Governors Food Supply Views

By the Associated Press

Des Moines, Iowa, March 14.—Eight Midwestern Governors, representatives of four other cornbelt States and former President Herbert Hoover will meet here tomorrow to discuss the problem of increasing the Nation's food production in the face of shortages of farm workers and machinery.

An Iowa State College survey released on the eve of the conference estimated that there are 70,000 fewer workers on the farms of this State now than in 1940.

Three years ago, the study said, the estimated Iowa agricultural labor supply totaled 393,000, compared with 323,000 this year. The gross loss was computed at 141,500 workers, about half to the armed services and the other half to war industries. Part of the decline was offset by new workers moving in to fill the gaps.

States to be represented are Illinois, Indiana, Kansas, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, North and South Dakota, Ohio, Wisconsin and Iowa.

To Address Legislature

Hoover will address the Iowa Legislature at 11 a. m. (C. W. T.) and give his principal address of the conference on "Food Production and Distribution" from 8 to 8:30 p. m., The latter speech will be broadcast by a group of Iowa stations. The former President, the Nation's World War I food administrator, also will participate in a round-table discussion with several Governors from 10:30 to 11 p. m. over the N. B. C. network.

Governors who accepted invitations to attend are John W. Bricker, Ohio; Harold Stassen, Minnesota; Dwight H. Green, Illinois; Dwight Griswold, Nebraska; Harry F. Kelly, Michigan; H. F. Schrickler, Indiana; M. Q. Sharpe, South Dakota, and F. C. Donnell, Missouri. All but Schrickler are Republicans.

Stassen late today sent word that he could not attend because of the press of business he found in Minneapolis after a trip to Washington. He said the Minnesota delegation would be headed by Lieut. Gov. Ed Thye.

No Practical Program

Iowa Gov. B. B. Hickenlooper, who called the conference, said in a statement that the farmer is "rapidly approaching the planting season and no practical or consistent program for the protection of our labor and machinery supply with which to produce these increased crops has been laid down in Washington."

Hickenlooper declared "an enormous acreage of crops still remains unharvested throughout the Middle West for lack of machinery to do the job." Much farm machinery has been frozen in storage by the Government, he added, and in other instances machinery has been released in areas "where they have no use for such types."

He said it "will be impossible to increase production if labor is further curtailed and the output of machinery lessened."

Here for the conference was Republican National Chairman Harrison E. Spangler. He came, he said, "as an observer."

New Glass Permits Welder to See His Work, Speedup

Southbridge, Mass., March 14 (AP). A newly-developed glass which permits gas welders to look through blinding glare and see welding operations from beginning to end, was announced today by Dr. E. D. Tillyer, research director of the American Optical Co.

The improved vision speeds a welder's production, and the glass protects his eyes by absorbing dangerous invisible rays generated during the welding operation, he said.

Previously, flame-welding glare made it impossible for welders to see clearly the welding rod an molten area, a factor which slowed the welding of battle equipment, he explained.

Dr. Tillyer disclosed a rare metal, didymium, had been added to standard welding glass to obtain the new "welder's window."

ing machinery by which the United Nations now reach decisions on military action.

Mr. Roosevelt was understood to have taken no sides in the debate. He did indicate, one conferee said, that it might be wise to condense the proposal somewhat.

Connally's objections to the measure in its present form forecast some changes in it during its consideration by the Foreign Relations Committee. There were indications, as well, that other proposals of a somewhat similar nature might be forthcoming.

Two of the President's close advisers, Harry Hopkins and James F. Byrnes, the latter a former Senator, sat in on the White House conference.

Delay in the return of Secretary of State Hull from a Florida vacation caused a change in plans and the Senators did not go on to the State Department.

Asked for details of the discussion, Ball said: "We want to get an organization first. We don't want to fight over details now."

The senatorial group included Connally, Senator Wagner (Democrat) of New York of the Foreign Relations Committee and four Senators who have been backing the proposed resolution. In addition to Hill and Ball, they included Senators Hatch (Democrat) of New Mexico) and Burton (Republican) of Ohio.

The proposed resolution, product of several weeks of conferences among Senators, became public Saturday a short time before Anthony Eden, British Foreign Secretary, called at the White House for dinner with the President and John G. Winant, American Ambassador to London, and for the start of their significant conferences.

Eden could be expected to take great interest in the proposal. He did not attend the White House conference yesterday, however, and there was no evidence of his presence about the Executive Mansion in the afternoon.

Introduction of the resolution in the Senate tomorrow would be followed by efforts to bring about its speedy adoption but its sponsors fully expect to encounter opposition.

Senator Wheeler (Democrat) of Montana, commenting on the proposal, declared that he did not "think the Senate should be committed to it at the present time."

"I don't think we ought to commit the country on just what we are going to do until we find out what Russia is going to do," he said. "I am not sure the people of the country will want to police the world."

Senator Clark (Democrat) of Missouri said he preferred not to comment at present.

People Interested

Ball said that his group had talked over the proposal with about 20 or 25 Senators. The people generally also are interested in the subject, he added.

"My opinion is," he said, "that the people think we are on the way to winning the war, but they are not so sure we are on the way to winning the peace."

He explained that he and his associates were trying to put into words the "minimum" of what is necessary to do the job.

Burton said the group was "trying to be helpful by taking a step ahead now and thus avoiding the fight over the peace in which the Senate indulged following the last war in the celebrated League of Nations scrap."

Asked whether there were any differences in the meeting with the President, Burton remarked that their statement that the conference was in general agreement on the objectives "sounds like cordiality."

Two Arrested After Woman, Two Young Girls Are Attacked

Two cases of criminal assault and a third of carnal knowledge, involving a 31-year-old deaf mute and two small girls, one 11, and the other 12, were under investigation last night by District police who after arresting two men cruised the Southeast section in search of a third.

Wanted for raping, beating and robbing the deaf and dumb woman, a laundry employe who was attacked at 2:30 a. m. yesterday in the 200 block of Twelfth Street Southeast, was a Negro described as follows by his victim:

Wore Light Top Coat

Thirty to 36 years of age, dark skinned, 5 feet 9 inches tall and weighing 185 pounds. He wore a light colored topcoat, black hat and dark trousers.

The woman reported he dragged her into an alley, assaulted her and then fled with her pocketbook containing $1.50.

The victim was taken to Gallinger Hospital and treated for lacerations to her throat, mouth and right knee, and shock. Her condition was not thought serious.

Of the two men under arrest, one was identified as Frank William Knighton, 59, 766 Eleventh Street Southeast.

Girl Identifies Suspect

The 11-year-old girl told police he attacked her in the park above the Congressional Garage at New Jersey Avenue and C Street Northwest, Friday.

Police, who accused him of carnal knowledge, also questioned the man in connection with a similar assault a few weeks ago in Georgetown.

The second man in custody was a Courtland, Va., transient who allegedly assaulted a 12-year-old girl in woods on the north grounds of Gallaudet College yesterday afternoon.

The girl told police that she was attacked as she walked through the woods with two 13-year-old companions, whose screams attracted two nearby Negro youths. At the approach of the latter, the attacker fled. The accused man, held on an open charge, was picked up later in the same neighborhood.

The girl was taken to her home, then to Gallinger Hospital, and later back to her residence. Her condition, it was said, is not serious.

Japs Repulsed in Yunnan

By the Associated Press

Chungking, March 14.—Chinese troops west of the Salween River in the southwestern province of Yunnan have thrown back Japanese forces after causing them about 1500 casualties, a Chinese communique said.

Chinese artillery also silenced Japanese batteries in an exchange across the Salween southeast of the Burma Road town of Lungling.

As the result of the crippling of the northern Japanese column thrown across the Yunnan border from Myitkyina, Burma, apprehensions of a few weeks ago that the Japanese were about to make a serious drive on Kunming have completely subsided in well-informed quarters.

(Berlin broadcasts reported today that all Tokyo newspapers were warning against the possibility of air raids on Japan "in view of American preparations in China."

(Declaring that there were 300 American and Chinese planes in China, the newspaper Asahi was quoted as saying American airbases in China, previously reported destroyed by the Japanese, have been restored and extended. The newspaper said 17 air bases had been established along the route between China and Russia and that ammunition and fuel were arriving in China by this route.)

Railway Yards Bombed

New Delhi, March 14 (AP).—Heavy bombers of the Tenth United States Air Force attacked the Pazundaung River bridge and the Mahlwagon Railway yards in Rangoon Friday and destroyed one of three challenging Japanese planes, damaged another and probably damaged the third, a communique said today.

C.I.O. Plans Plea Against Bridges' Deportation

Sidney R. Katz, secretary-treasurer of the Maryland and District of Columbia Industrial Union Council (C. I. O.), disclosed yesterday that he had urged all affiliates to petition President Roosevelt to drop deportation proceedings against Harry Bridges, West Coast labor leader.

In a letter, Katz reviewed the support which the national C. I. O. had given to Bridges and called for an intensification of the campaign.

Boy Who Sought Santa Claus Found Drowned

Boston, March 14 (AP).—A body identified by his father as that of Malcolm ("Bucky") Harris, a 7-year-old boy who left his home to go see a department store Santa Claus and never came back, was taken today from the Charles River.

Cause of the death of the boy, missing from his Cambridge home since December 13, was not determined immediately.

On Christmas, the family, hoping he would be found alive, put his toys under a decorated tree and set a place for him at the table.

City's Youngest Photographer Stages Exhibit

Joyce Kent of Somerset, Md., who at the age of 7 is Washington's youngest professional photographer, yesterday also was Washington's busiest, as she showed a one-man exhibit at the Children's Museum, 4215 Massachusetts Avenue Northwest.

JOYCE KENT

Joyce embarked on her career at the advanced age of 5, when she insisted that she be allowed to take a picture of her mother, Mrs. Morton E. Kent, the former Peggy Duffy, well-known local photographers.

"Since then she has taken pictures of nearly everyone in the neighborhood," her father said. Yesterday she photographed some 50 persons who attended her show.

Thus far Joyce has amassed a fortune of $112, which she has invested in war bonds and stamps. She is a second-grade pupil at Somerset school.

World News Center!

STANLEY RICHARDSON—director of NBC's London office—broadcasts keen, first-hand analyses of European developments on WRC's world-news programs.

RICHARD HARKNESS—for ten years a well-known figure in Washington news circles—sums up the day's happenings at 11:15-11:30 p.m. on WRC.

Here's why WRC—980 on your dial—is your news-passport to the world...

WHEN you tune in to WRC at 8 o'clock in the morning... in the space of a few minutes you may hear: "This is London"..."This is Australia"..."This is Algiers."...

In a single broadcast you span the world—you go right to where the news is happening—and you hear the most expert opinion, the keenest analyses, the most informed comment.

What enables WRC to offer you this most complete and authoritative news coverage? The answer points straight to the basic structure of America's system of free radio. Here are the simple facts:

WRC is one of the 143 stations of the NBC Network. The National Broadcasting Company owns WRC and five other stations that are great originating-points for news. The other 137 NBC stations are independently owned Affiliates. But ALL of the news services and other features, made possible by the NBC network operation, are available to ALL of these stations alike!

What does this network operation mean to Washington?... It means a radio station that brings you the finest news features from all over the world. It means that, if you want to keep abreast of the times and ahead of opinion, you'll tune in—and stay tuned in—to 980 on your dial!

DO YOU KNOW... that broadcasts from WRC are one important way the Government informs the nation of its policies and plans. For example, in 1942, The National Broadcasting Company contributed its facilities and services for twenty Presidential addresses to the nation?

ELMER PETERSON—famous foreign correspondent—is heard regularly from London over WRC. Listen to him on World News Round-Up at 8:00-8:15 a. m.

JOHN VANDERCOOK—widely traveled reporter skillfully sums up the day's doings on "News of the World" with world-wide pick-ups at 7:15-7:30 p. m. over WRC.

Antiracketeering Restrictions Acceptable To A.F.L. 'if Legal Rights Are Safeguarded'

The A. F. of L. said yesterday it "will be willing to accept" the bill by Representative Hobbs (Democrat), Alabama, to subject labor unions to the Federal Antiracketeering Law if an amendment is inserted to safeguard present "legal" rights of labor.

The A. F. of L. stipulated that the amendment should provide "that activities of union members and labor organizations, recognized as legal by Congress in the Clayton Act, the Norris-LaGuardia Act, the Railway Labor Act and the National Labor Relations Act, are also legal under the Hobbs bill."

(The Clayton Act contains a provision exempting activities of labor unions from the antitrust laws; the Norris-LaGuardia Act prohibits issuance of injunctions in labor disputes; the other two laws primarily concern collective bargaining rights.)

The A. F. of L.'s statement said that Representative Celler (Democrat), New York, will introduce the amendment when the Hobbs bill comes up in the House this week. William Green, president of the A. F. of L., contended that the measure in its present form "will have the effect of prohibiting legitimate labor activities along with actual racketeering."

"The author of these amendments," he said, "has made a gesture toward exempting legitimate labor activities by a proviso in one section of the bill, confined to transportation, stating that nothing contained in that section shall be construed as repealing or modifying Sections 6 and 20 of the Clayton Act, the Norris-LaGuardia Act, the Railway Labor Act or the National Labor Relations Act.

"If Representative Hobbs is sincere in seeking to protect legal trade union activities, there is no logical reason why he should not be willing to make the proviso applicable to all sections of the bill and to express it in a positive rather than a negative way. That is all the Celler amendment seeks to accomplish."

The funeral of Mrs. Jeanette Evans Lee, wife of J. Donald Lee of Chevy Chase, who died in a Washington hospital, took place Saturday from the funeral home of W. Reuben Pumphrey, Bethesda. The Rev. Charles Lowry, acting rector of All Saints Episcopal Church, Chevy Chase, conducted the services. Burial was in Rockville Union Cemetery.

Mrs. Lee was born at Chevy Chase and was virtually a lifelong resident of that area. Besides her husband, she leaves both parents, Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur E. For War Women

Fit Working To Shopping, McNutt Plea

Staggered hours of work so women may give their shopping the added time required under rationing, but still carry on work in war plants and necessary services were proposed yesterday by War Manpower Commission Chairman McNutt.

Declaring that six million women will be in war industries this year, McNutt said in a radio interview with Ernest K. Lindley that changes must be made in present work systems in many fields of commerce and industry.

Eighteen Million to Be Needed

"Other millions of women will be running elevators, working in retail stores, driving buses and taxis and working in laundries. Women are needed in all kinds of work to take the places of men called to the fighting forces or transferred to work which women cannot do. By the end of this year we anticipate that almost 18 million women will have answered the call to serve their country.

"In some of our war plants working hours should be staggered so that women may have enough time to shop for food and to do all the countless errands connected with running a home. The woman who is not worried about her home is a better worker.

Neighborly Services

"Adequate school lunches must be provided so that mothers at the machine know their children are well fed in the middle of the day. Daytime care for small children, and good after-school programs are needed.

"A community, after all, is made up of people who are neighbors. If the woman who lives next door is working, maybe her neighbor can do her shopping for her. Certainly the woman who is not employed can do her shopping at times when factory workers are inside the plant," he added.

McNutt said that more than two million additional women, bringing the Nation's working force of women to a total of 18 million, would be recruited from housewives, girls just being graduated from high school, and from women whose skill in household work such as sewing, cooking and cleaning has given them certain skills useable in factories and in service establishments.

Soft-Coal Miners to Make Final Pleas Today Before Pay-Raise Parleys With Owners Begin

By the Associated Press

New York, March 14.—Northern and Southern soft coal mine owners probably will hear tomorrow the last of speakers for the United Mine Workers before actual negotiations begin in closed session for a new contract, with wages boosts for 450,000 miners, union spokesmen said today.

"It's time to get down to the business at hand," declared one union man. "We must demand that the operators give serious consideration to our demands and discuss them openly and frankly."

A great part of the separate meetings which began last week between the two owners' groups and the U. M. W. to work out a contract to supplant the one expiring March 31, was devoted to appeals by union district representatives for higher wages and improved conditions.

Some of these speakers threatened there would be work stoppages or drastic action in April unless the miners got a new pact with raises.

Sole speakers for the operators were the heads of the two groups, both of which rejected the major demands, made through UMW President John L. Lewis, including $2-a-day basic wage increase, a general $8-a-day minimum and unization of minor bosses. Present basic day rate is $7.

The union denounced consistently the War Labor Board Little Steel formula, which would allow 15 per cent salary increases to cover living cost rises from January 1, 1941, to May 1, 1942, charging the formula as applied to labor tended to wipe out collective bargaining in the Nation.

The union demanded that the contract be negotiated without outside assistance.

Benet's Funeral To Be Held Today

New York, March 14 (AP).—Funeral services for Stephen Vincent Benet, one of America's youngest and foremost men of letters, will be held here tomorrow afternoon in St. James Episcopal Church.

At his death Benet had half-completed a long poem titled "Western Star," which was to have been a narrative in the tradition of "John Brown's Body," depicting the sweep of American colonization.

Baby Brokers

The Collins case brings again to public attention the need for effective regulation of child placement in the District. In this case Mrs. Ann Collins was given a suspended sentence for misusing money entrusted to her in a baby's behalf. Unfortunately the fact that most adoption cases involve illegitimacy keeps most of the abuses practiced under present law from the public eye. And public and legislators alike, seldom confronted with the heartbreaking results of inadequate regulations, are lethargic in pressing for remedial action. Local welfare officials have asked proper regulation of baby farming for years, knowing that the District has become a happy hunting ground for the traffic, since most States have long since had stringent regulations governing adoption. This means that mothers here are put under pressure by commercial agents to give up their children, identities of children are lost, and case histories of children and adopting parents are not adequately investigated before placements are made. As The Post pointed out more than a year ago, boom-town conditions are making the field even more profitable for the unscrupulous or ignorant commercial adoption agent. A nullifying amendment attached in the House to the sound licensing bill proposed last year kept it from being acted upon in the Senate. Let us hope that a bill with teeth in it can be passed this year.

The French Sailors

Five members of the crew of the French battleship Richelieu and seven sailors from the French tanker L'Elorm, now in New York for repairs, have been arrested by the Bureau of Immigration and are being held at Ellis Island. It appears that these arrests came after the French naval mission had invoked the assistance of American authorities, including our Navy Department, in the apprehension of "deserters." There is every reason to believe that in this case the word "desertion" has been used to cover an attempted transfer of allegiance by the French sailors from General Giraud's standard to that of General de Gaulle.

Several hundred sailors from the French ships now in New York have already made this transfer, despite the fact that it means for them less pay, meaner living conditions and greater dangers. Some of these men say that the antagonism between them and their officers goes back to the invasion of North Africa when, they claim, they were ordered against their will to resist the Americans. At that time, it appears, a great many of the French sailors in Africa had the mistaken but not illogical impression that General de Gaulle and some of his forces had accompanied the Americans to Africa.

Here's a sorry mess, indeed! Since the arrival of the French ships in New York "desertions" to the Fighting French forces are said to have taken place at the rate of 15 or 20 a day. If these defections continue, it is obvious that the French ships will become wholly useless for military purposes since there will be virtually no crews left to man them. And if we use our police powers to compel these men to serve under officers they obviously neither trust nor respect, and whose friendship for our cause is of very recent date, if we forcibly prevent Frenchmen serving under the leader whom they consider the representative of French liberties, what becomes of our fine promises about the restoration of those liberties? We shall have gone out of our way to give still another expression to our incurable hostility to General de Gaulle and all that he stands for.

Perhaps it is not difficult to find the psychological explanation of this hostility. Since the tragic spring of 1940 there has not been the slightest doubt as to what General de Gaulle stands for. He stands for those Frenchmen who rejected the armistice and repudiated Vichy. His policy has been simple, forthright and consistent; our policy in relation to France since the armistice has been devious and complicated. It used to be the fashion to belittle General de Gaulle for his supposed stubbornness and political incapacity. What we had overlooked was the appeal that simplicity and consistency can have in a world surfeited with dissimulation, propaganda and opportunism.

In short, our dilemma over the case of the French sailors is of one piece with our dilemma over Admiral Robert of Martinique. Out of solicitude for Admiral Robert's amour propre, we angrily denounced Admiral Muselier's seizure of St. Pierre and Miquelon from Vichy. For all our solicitude, we have not won over Robert and his ships, though we did force the zealous Muselier into retirement. Through the same misguided expediency we were all but prepared to abandon our proved friends in North Africa. Only the subsequent storm of indignation here and abroad seems to have aroused us to the necessity of correcting such a monstrous anomaly.

Moving Forward

The Hatch-Hill-Burton-Ball resolution to be introduced in the Senate this week is one of the most constructive and far-reaching movements originating on Capitol Hill in recent years. We believe that the four Senators have succeeded in expressing the wishes of an overwhelming majority of the American people. And free men everywhere will elicit fresh hope and courage from the fact that members of both parties represented in the Senate are joining hands in an effort to solidify the strength of the United Nations in war and to hold them together in the maintenance of the subsequent peace.

If the four Senators had attempted to work out among themselves the terms of a peace treaty, their efforts would have been highly presumptuous. But they have not done that. On the contrary, they ask the Senate to request the President to take the initiative in calling meetings of representatives of the United Nations with the object of forming a lasting international system. Acceptance of the resolution would, of course, leave the President entirely free to handle the problem in his own way. But it would put the treaty-ratifying branch of our Government on record in favor of international cooperation on a comprehensive scale. And it would exert widespread influence in favor of precisely such an organization as the four Senators propose.

Yesterday's conference between the President and sponsors of the resolution resulted in agreement on its "broad objectives." Unquestionably the Administration is as eager as Senators Hatch, Hill, Burton and Ball to strengthen the sinews which bind the United Nations together. We may be sure that the President and the Secretary of State are also more cognizant than the sponsors of this resolution of the difficulties that stand in the way of negotiating the proposed agreements. But the time has come to make our influence felt in behalf of the sound principles outlined in the Atlantic Charter and again embodied in the proposed resolution.

First on the list of objectives which the suggested United Nations Organization would seek is full coordination of military and economic resources to hasten the defeat of the Axis. That objective alone would be sufficient to justify the United States in using all of its influence to bring about a formal council of statesmen representing all members of the Grand Alliance. Full cooperation in the military sphere would automatically make negotiation of the peace easier.

While the proposed resolution also contains simple guidelines for the government of territory captured from the common enemy, for the relief of rescued peoples, and for maintenance of peace once the firing ceases, these would reflect only the wishes and hopes of the Senate and the American people. Those principles would have to be matched against the ideas and objectives of our allies. The really great advantage would be the existence of a council which could wrestle with specific problems as they arise.

We believe that the four sponsors of this resolution have caught the real spirit and temperament of the American people at a timely moment. Regardless of what the obstacles may be, our influence must be cast on the side of effective cooperation for the attainment of a more orderly world than we have had in the past. By pointing the most hopeful way for us to follow toward that objective the forthcoming resolution is an act of forward-looking statesmenship that should command an enthusiastic response from the people.

From Bad To Worse

Commissioner Mason's protest last week against the further diffusion of governmental powers in the District merits more attention than it has thus far received. Federal agencies are encroaching upon the local government at many different points. Even such local functions as policing, fire protection and promotion of health and welfare, Mr. Mason said, are "not only under constant Federal pressure but frequent Federal influence." The trend ought to be toward centralized and systematic administration of the city's affairs, but actually it is running in the opposite direction.

We wholly sympathize with the Commissioner's complaint. He is saying in effect that Congress has left the District with a makeshift political system over which the city fathers have only vague and uncertain control. That is a chief source of weakness in the District regime. And, having deprived the District of a modern municipal government, Congress seems to have only a minimum of confidence in the obsolete machinery now in operation. But instead of going to the root of the problem, Congress has tried to evade it by giving Federal agencies increasing control over local functions. The recent denial of emergency health funds to the District by agreement of the Budget Bureau, the Federal Security Agency and the Federal Works Administration is a striking illustration of the resulting confusion.

The Commissioners have good reason to be alarmed over this chopping up of local administration. We hope that they will be able to convince Congress that further division of responsibility only aggravates the original source of the local government's weakness. In this way some progress may be made toward modernization of the welter of local boards and agencies that now go their separate ways, independent of any central policies that the Commissioners may adopt.

It would be a serious mistake, however, to overlook the fact that the weakness of the Board of Commissioners itself is one of the biggest obstacles to the centralization of authority which Mr. Mason seeks. The board cannot speak for the Federal Government. Nor can it speak for the people of the District. It is not a reflection upon any of its members to say that the board is an anomaly that neither Congress nor the people wish to trust with the full powers of municipal government.

In trying to streamline the local regime, the Commissioners would do well to recognize this fact. There are many ways in which the board could be strengthened, including the election of at least some of its members. If the board has the courage to work out and sponsor a plan to rejuvenate itself, while asking for tighter controls over other local agencies, it would probably get a much more sympathetic hearing.

Still Missing

Propaganda Minister Goebbels was quick to reply to Acting Secretary Welles' disclosure that the Department of State is in possession of reports to the effect that Herr Hitler has suffered the "psycho-motor breakdown" which so many psychiatrists have predicted for him. The Associated Press quotes Goebbels as saying over the Berlin radio that Hitler "is as healthy as a human being can possibly be and he is practically directing the war at the front as well as at home." That prompt and swift denial might easily be interpreted as meaning that the Nazi propagandists have become supersensitive over the Fuehrer's long silence.

Mr. Welles was careful to explain, of course, that the reports he has received are "unconfirmed" and that not too much importance is being attached to them. But the Acting Secretary of State is not given to making statements without having weighed their effects beforehand. The fact that he has mentioned these reports at all gives them a certain significance. For they underline a series of rumors to the effect that Hitler is dead, that he is a prisoner of the general staff, and so forth. Since November nothing has been definitely known of his whereabouts. On January 30 he failed to turn up for his customary speech in celebration of the Nazi accession to power. Yesterday more fuel was added to the rumors by the unexplained postponement of the annual Heroes' Day celebration.

That something has happened to Hitler is obvious. We do not need to know what has happened to turn his absence to good account in our psychological warfare against the Nazis. No amount of reassurance from Goebbels will offset the damaging effect of these reports on German morale. The only effective answer he could make to Mr. Welles would be to produce Hitler. And that he has failed to do.

Banks Full Of Bonds

In response to a request from the President, Chairman Crowley of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation has issued a memorandum briefly summarizing the gains made by the banks of the country since the Nation-wide banking closures of 1933. Today in the midst of a war that has strained our financial resources beyond our wildest imaginings, Chairman Crowley states that the banks "appear to be in the strongest asset position on record." They have the confidence of the public, and their lobbies are crowded with customers depositing money and cashing checks instead of being filled with panic-stricken individuals trying to withdraw funds in advance of closures.

While this bright picture is not overdrawn, it is well to keep in mind that bank prosperity is based today, as never before, upon the ability of the banks to serve the Government by buying bonds. Mr. Crowley states that over 70 per cent of the assets of all insured commercial banks (and that means of most commercial banks) are Government securities. So long as the people retain their faith and confidence in the credit of the Government, those assets are absolutely sound. But if that confidence should ever be impaired, or if the value of Government securities were to decline to any marked degree, for any reason, the banks would be in serious trouble.

The surest way to maintain a healthy banking system under the extraordinary conditions of wartime is for the public to increase its purchases of Government securities and reduce the amount of Government obligations that have to be sold to the commercial banks. Widespread distribution of the public debt gives the people a stake in the financial future of the country which is favorable to sound financial practices. And at the same time it immobilizes idle funds instead of permitting them to be used to bid up prices.

RENUNCIATION

To look on life with quiet eyes,
Undaunted when its glory dies;
To ask no bounty, make no prayer,
To hope not, and yet not despair;
To take what joy the hands can hold,
But loose it soon, ere it is old;
To rise, uncowering, from pain,
Indifferent if it strike again;
To trust no gods, yet have no fear,
To cling to none, however dear;
To reach for naught beyond the hour:
This is the way to peace and power.

Deferring Farmers

By Mark Sullivan

Partial Solution

THE SENATE this week will act on the bill, sponsored by Senator Bankhead of Alabama, to defer farmers in the draft—defer them, not by discretion of local draft boards, but by direct, compulsory mandate of law. Until lately, it was supposed this bill would not pass. While a majority of Senators understood the need of keeping workers on the farms, they were reluctant to go counter to Army heads. And Army heads and draft officials had several objections to this bill. They felt that any compulsory blanket deferment of an occupation violates the principle of Selective Service; that deferment of one occupation might lead to demands on behalf of other occupations; that men wishing to avoid the draft might take up farm work with that motive; that there would be difficulty in deciding borderline cases of part-time farmers and the like. These objections weighed with Senate leaders, who hesitate to go counter to Army heads in any matter affecting size of the Army and facility in building it up.

Lately, however, it has become likely the Bankhead bill will pass or come close to passing. This is because Congressmen, in close contact with their districts, are more aware of the acuteness of the farm and food problem than either the general public or the Army and draft officials. The country-wide condition is illustrated by the number of auctions of cows advertised in county-seat newspapers. In two issues of a weekly published at Elkhorn, Wis., were printed, among many others, the advertisements from which the following are quoted—they compose a saddening picture of economic and social dislocation in one of the country's most fertile dairying communities:

"DUE to labor shortage, I have decided to discontinue operating my farm and will sell at public sale . . . 22 high-grade Guernsey cattle" . . .

"Because of the shortage of help . . . the undersigned will sell at public auction 23 head of Holstein dairy cows, 2 head of Guernsey dairy cows, 1 Swiss dairy cow, 2 Holstein stock bulls. Most of these cows will be fresh or springing at day of sale."

"Having decided to quit farming, the undersigned will sell at public auction . . . 4 dairy cows."

"Having decided to quit farming [will sell] . . . 12 milk cows, Holsteins and Guernseys, 7 fresh, 2 close springers, balance milking; 5 heifers coming 2 years old (bred); Holstein bull."

"Having decided to quit farming, will sell at public auction . . . 23 head of Holstein dairy cows."

"The farm having been sold, there will be offered for sale 35 Holstein cows."

"Having sold my farm I will sell at public auction . . . 23 head of cattle, Holsteins and Guernseys."

"Having decided to discontinue operating my farm I will offer for sale . . . 34 high-grade Holsteins and Guernseys."

"Having decided to quit farming I will sell . . . 24 cattle. This is a good herd of high-grade Holsteins, young cows, good producers."

For adequate understanding, it would be desirable to learn, by country-wide statistics if practicable, the answers to some questions: What is the increase in the sales of dairy herds advertised in rural newspapers? To what extent are the cows purchased by other dairymen—which would mean no reduction of milk supply; and to what extent by butchers—which would not only reduce present milk supply, but reduce the number of cows, and the birth-rate, with effects two, three and four years from now?

THAT the condition is serious is suggested by Secretary of Agriculture Wickard, who, at a Senate hearing, testified: "I have become increasingly alarmed about the inability to get enough farm labor . . . I am more alarmed today than I was yesterday."

The condition will be only partially cured by enactment of the bill deferring farmers in the draft. Most of the taking by the draft has already been done. Besides, it is not the draft that has taken most of the farm workers. Reports from nearly 3000 county agents of the Department of Agriculture say the major cause is high wages paid in industry.

There is no likelihood of high wages in industry being reduced by any Administration policy—rather the contrary. The answer to the farm and food problem must be found in some other direction.

Cheer For Soldiers

Having just read Walter Lippmann's account of the coldly efficient embarkation of soldiers, I am writing to ask that you will use your great influence toward the realization of his suggestion: that there be some way worked out of cheering on the men who are leaving for the unknown dangers and hardships of war. Not only would it mean much to the men but to their families as well, to know that they were heartened by friendly faces and perhaps the cup of coffee from the Red Cross or other suitable groups.

According To Plan

By Paul Schubert

German Strategic Problem

THE GERMANS have been "shortening their front" in Russia, "according to plan."

It is a plan that was forced upon Germany. Under the circumstances, it appears a sound plan—though hardly one to boast about, in the sense that "according to plan" is a phrase intended to make the world (including the German people) believe it is still Germany's privilege to "plan" the war.

It's a great advantage to fight a war according to your own plan. This advantage goes to the side which is stronger and swifter—it's called having the "initiative," and it's greatest benefit is that you can say well in advance, with considerable certainty, where you will use your troops, what kind of training and equipment they will need, and what general pattern the war will have.

THE CAT, waiting at the mouse hole, has an offensive plan.

The mouse, after the cat has pounced, has a "plan" too. The mouse plans to escape. The mouse's plan is defensive, opportunistic. The mouse has neither time, strength, nor opportunity to think of hurting the cat. The mouse hopes merely that the cat's attention will waver for a moment—waits for a split-second to escape the sharp claws . . . to scramble to safety before the cat can pounce again.

The mouse may fight much the harder of the two—the mouse is fighting for its life. The mouse may be the more successful of the two—may make its escape, carry through its "plan." But whatever happens, the mouse doesn't hurt the cat, and can't. The mouse's plan is purely defensive, solely concerned with escape from mortal danger.

Hitler's "plan" in Russia, and also in Tunisia, is a defensive plan.

It's the first time during the war that the Reich has been on the defensive. We have gotten so used to a Germany able and eager to attack, that we tend to think of all German "plans" as attack plans—a form of thinking that Germany would like to encourage.

But defensive plans are not "attack" plans, even though they may employ fierce local attacks in the effort to shake loose from enemy grip.

Defensive plans are opportunistic—they change shape from day to day, adapt themselves to every shift in the situation. Above all, they try to capitalize on local weakness or inattention on the opponent's part. Since there is little hope of winning by strength, defensive plans lay great stress on timing, ability and quickness. Ruse, bluff, feint—there's no dodge that isn't tried. The very word "dodge," used in this connection, is eloquent of defensive maneuvering. Just now Hitler is far less concerned with what he will do next June and July, than in what he will do this afternoon, and tonight, and tomorrow. The privilege of making long-term plans has passed over to our side.

The fighting in Tunisia and Russia has been a graphic demonstration of the new German "plan."

In Tunisia the Axis armies are in a trap, backs to the sea. British-American-French armies hem them in at north, south and center. Three times the Axis armies have lashed out in the hope of breaking through the encirclement, at north, center and south. Each darting effort has been stopped, beaten back—

Plan?

It seems unlikely that Rommel is strong enough to have an offensive plan. He's where he is not because the German command believes he can drive the British and Americans out of North Africa—he's there to hold the British and Americans away from the Sicilian Channel and away from Europe . . .

There in North Africa the offensive plan, the long-term plan, is now for our side to conceive and carry through.

IN RUSSIA, when Russian pressure grew irresistible, the Germans "planned" to shorten their line. When early spring thaw bogged down the Russian drive to the south, the Germans immediately abandoned the "shortening" idea, at least for the time being, and rushed in fresh troops to counterattack—not as a general offensive, but as an opportunistic blow to shake off sharp claws (not cat's claws, but bear's claws!)

Hitler's plan is now a squirming, wriggling, evasive action in defense.

While he is on the defensive, he won't do us serious hurt—but if he puts through a successful defensive, he may escape to safety before we pounce on him and smash him. If we relax, grow overconfident at this hour, if we let him escape, we waste the priceless opportunity of the initiative.

Durable Razor Blades

Back in those grim days of 1932, when conditions might have been worse, technocracy captured the imagination of our ailing economy as a possible way out. And, among the many startling revelations made by the author of the plan was the shocking razor blade situation.

It was charged that manufacturers deliberately wanted to keep man's principal shaving tool expendable. For industry was alleged to be determined to protect the profitable repeat aspect of the blade business by offering a comparatively inferior product and by convincing the unsuspecting user that a new blade every day would keep the whiskers away. And while the user perhaps didn't realize it, he was making a contribution to the return of prosperity by using more and more blades.

But industry was understood to have the secret of making blades which would take a much keener edge than anything on the market and retain it practically in perpetuity. And industry guarded the secret jealously. Now, of course, is the time to bring the process out into the open. For steel is scarce and the kind of treatment prescribed for Hitler will take plenty. The manufacturer with the courage and patriotism to make such a welcome blade available would have to resign himself to the loss of his old-style repeat business. But in the long run, he would be richly rewarded for his sacrifice.

Worthy Bureaucrats

These constant attacks on Government employes as bureaucrats begin to get on our nerves.

Some months ago the Government approached them for assistance, Democrats and Republicans alike. Deputies of WPB and of OPA went to university classrooms crying, "Help us, help us." They took them straight from the campus, professors and students alike.

These employes did their job honestly without asking for applause from Congress or from the Government. They worked long hours, very often on Sundays, not for cheap politicians, but for Uncle Sam and for his Army, which represents their blood, their sons, their fathers and their brothers.

Now they are despised as bureaucrats. I think the Washington bureaucrats did a good job. They spurred mass production, stabilized prices and wages and they helped to save this country. They find satisfaction in the results of their work. Some Congressmen and some Senators may minimize their work, but if men or women like Clare Luce attack their honor, they should know that they play a dangerous game. Liberty of speech is no license. Mr. Wolman's Article

Mr. Wolman's article in today's Post on labor unions' use of compulsion is quite interesting. Mr. Wolman says that labor unions are an unusual type of voluntary organization. Then he goes on to say that the use of "force and compulsion appears to be one of their indispensable tools of government."

Even Mr. Wolman will admit that any organization, from the smallest neighborhood lodge to the largest international organization, is based on force to a smaller or greater degree. But based on force it is.

By joining an organization, an individual per se gives up certain rights, or delegates them to certain representatives. Otherwise there would be an unbearable degree of chaos. Just as when a person is a citizen of a country, he gives up, or delegates, certain rights for the common good, and to make organization feasible, so does a person who joins an organization do the same thing.

Too Many Seeds

Your editorial, "Seeds and Rations," and the accompanying letter were noted by me today, a born farmer, experienced in vegetable growing. Your would-be gardener has six in his family. He positively cannot use 14 pounds of seed unless he is going into commercial gardening. A pound of beans plants 150 feet or more of row; a pound of peas plants 100 feet or more. He wants to plant over 2000 feet of row. He simply can't handle it, nor eat the product, if successful.

More, he says he knows even an experienced gardener does not get back his seed. Right! On land I did not know last year I did not get back seed on limas, but on snap beans we did fine. I used, all told, three packets, not pounds, and it was all I could handle.

Consider Peace Now

Much consideration is being given to the peace terms. Many advocate action now.

There are also those who are especially afraid that the capitalist system will be threatened if we start in earnest to make rules expressive of freedom, of democracy, of cooperation in international relations, designed to provide justice, security and peace. Amongst these are financiers, manufacturers and politicians.

It is true that the peace is a complicated subject, but there is no good reason to restrain our officials from expressing on behalf of the people the principles for which we are fighting, and our aims of the future.

"Gosh, what do you think of this 1 point rationing system?"

"That's the one where you get the steady signal first and the rising and falling whistle later, ain't it?"

"I think so. Anyhow you just do it all on points until the all clear comes."

"It's got me all tangled up. I've studied the charts issued by OPA for hours at a time and I still can't find Velikie Luki."

"I heard Gabriel Heatter say that it would take the whole 48 points to get Dnieperpetrovsk even in the small can."

"It's terrible. The broccoli situation must be very bad from what I can learn."

"It was the awful cold weather, I suppose."

"Well, we've just got to make the best of it. But imagine it taking so many points for catsup and chili sauce! Evidently that Churchill-Roosevelt conference didn't do any good at all."

"Did you get the new book No. 2 all right?"

"I had a lot of trouble. They kept asking me if I was in line for pleasure or on business."

"As if anybody would call it pleasure to stand in line two or three hours just to get three pairs of tomatoes a year! It's so silly."

"I had quite a time answering some of the questions, especially the one asking how many tires I had on November 28."

"The one asking me to declare all shoes, gasoline books and pineapples I had stored away was the tough one."

"It was a nice book when you got it, although I didn't care much for the colors."

"Red and blue coupons are very pretty, I think, but which means for you to stop whatever you're doing and seek shelter?"

"I think you do that on red, but I didn't listen to the latest broadcast on the new signals."

"What do you think of the war?"

"I dunno what to think. The Russians have captured Peyrouton and Poona, and that's fine, but we've lost Ruml, and that place called Basic."

"Are they in the 8-ounce containers or over?"

People's Mandate

The reason so many refuse to exercise their privilege of voting is that under our present system of voting the ballot does not allow them to express their real views. We are given our choice of two candidates for President, but often neither one meets our full approval. Give us the opportunity of casting either a positive or a negative vote, and then our vote will mean something. Those who can fully approve candidate A will cast a positive vote for him, while others who disapprove of his many shortcomings, but still prefer him to candidate B, will cast a negative vote for him and the followers of B will do likewise.

On counting the votes the positive and negative votes of each candidate would be entered on the tally sheet separately; but they would be combined to determine the winner.

Under this system the winner might find he had received more negative than positive votes, and he would then have no right to claim he had the mandate of the people to carry out all his policies. He would have to watch his step.

Finns Lose Peace Hope

To Stay With Axis

By Edwin Shanke
Associated Press Staff Writer

Stockholm, March 15.—A majority of the people of war-torn Finland appear to believe that it is their unhappy destiny to fight out the war at Germany's side, no matter what this may bring.

They say they see no immediate practical prospects of a separate peace with Soviet Russia. This is the strong impression I have brought back from a two-weeks' stay in Helsinki, Finnish capital.

No matter with whom you talk in Finland—high officials or the man on the street living in a censorship blackout—you realize they want peace, but they say it is a practical impossibility under present circumstances unless, for example, the United States gave a guarantee which would enable them to forget their anti-Russian feelings and remove other obstacles which they say are in the way of their withdrawal from the conflict. There was no hint that the Finns were now taking peace soundings.

Morale is seemingly high at home and at the front and the food, although bad, is much better than a year ago.

Willing to Take Chance

The Finns, therefore, seem ready to take a chance on the expected German spring offensive against Russia, because they hope that Germany will knock out Russia, or at least that the two countries will weaken one another to a point where Finland can extricate herself.

This does not mean the Finns believe the Axis has a chance to win the war.

They contend their war is a private back-yard affair—a continuation of the winter war 1939-40 which in their minds bears no relationship to the greater global conflict.

Their hopes rise and fall with each German victory and defeat in the East.

Meantime the Russians are not allowing the Finns to forget they are in a war, although the fronts are quiet.

Air-raids are common in the Helsinki district, but they are principally of the nuisance type.

The capital of Finland itself presents a dreary spectacle. One sees more men who have lost an arm or leg in the war than in Berlin 16 months ago or in Londa a few months ago.

German soldiers also are a part of the capital picture, although not in the numbers one would expect.

Women dominate the home front. They are taking the place of men almost everywhere.

Shoes at a Premium

A kindly chambermaid in the hotel advised against putting shoes in the hall for shining saying they might disappear. Shoes are virtually off the market.

Shelves in the shops are virtually empty except for a few home products made of wood, porcelain, paper or glass.

"We see no signs of a change in the Russian attitude toward us," one official said. "Until we do there seems little sense in talking about peace.

"It is true we want peace, but not at any price. We are prepared to fight for security and independence to the end—to commit suicide, if you wish."

Responsible sources admitted the Germans had been approached and had "given a negative answer" on the question of withdrawing, from north Finland if it would make a separate Finnish-Russian peace possible.

But some Finnish sources suggest Finland might be ready to take peace steps, which they realize is the only way to show friendship for the United States and the United Natoins, if America is prepared to guarantee Finland an army of occupation of 500,000 men and food supplies.

They frankly add that they have no confidence in the Atlantic Charter as a guarantee, although as a democratic country, they approve its principles.

"We've had our experience with paper pacts," one official said.

Mr. Eden's Visit

By Ernest K. Lindley

Toward Increasing Collaboration

THE PRESIDENT and Prime Minister Churchill have conferred four times—once before our full participation in the war.

LINDLEY

The British and American Chiefs of Staff have conferred several times—indeed, through the machinery of the combined Chiefs of Staff set up in Washington, they consult continuously. The war production chiefs of the two nations have moved back and forth across the Atlantic. There is combined British-American machinery to deal with shipping, raw materials, and other matters related to the war.

But this is all machinery for the conduct of the war. It is not concerned with a broad realm of political and economic problems which, if left unsolved, are likely to lead to trouble when the war ends, if not sooner. The President and Mr. Churchill have had to make some major political decisions. Mr. Churchill appeared as coauthor of the Atlantic Charter, but he has been concerned with winning the war almost to the exclusion of postwar problems and has done little, if anything, to popularize the Atlantic Charter.

The regular diplomatic channels have been kept wide open and, with Lord Halifax at one end and Ambasssador Winant at the other, have been capably manned. But high officials on both sides have felt for months that the time had arrived for a free exchange of views on political and economic questions between ranking representatives of the two governments.

MOST of these questions are not exclusively the concern of Britain and the United States, but are primarily their mutual concern because unless these two nations agree and set a pattern there will not be much hope of obtaining agreement among others. Our interests and those of the British Empire are interlocked around the world. Intimate British-American collaboration is the first essential to winning the war, and it will be the first essential to keeping the war won.

Informed quarters do not expect any sensational agreements to come out of Mr. Eden's visit. They do hope for progress toward working out many specific problems. These may reach into such delicate questions as international civil air transport after the war and other phases of commercial policy. But, as the White House announcement was carefully framed to imply, there is no thought of a British-American "ganging up" on our other allies. The conferences with Mr. Eden are regarded as an essential step toward further and broader conferences among the other United Nations. Premier Stalin was informed in advance of Mr. Eden's visit and, according to London, expressed pleasure.

THERE are certain major questions which, as a practical matter, will have to be settled chiefly by the principal allies. They have the power and therefore the main responsibility, not only for winning the war but for keeping it won. But the official view in Washington is that the other United Nations must be brought into the picture as far and as soon as possible. The impending United Nations conference on food and agricultural production is only a first step toward converting the United Nations from a label into a series of planning and operating agencies. These can be put to work on specific problems which will have to be dealt with as soon as the fighting stops.

There is reason to believe that if Russia will collaborate, this international machinery can develop fairly rapidly. China and most of the smaller nations want it.

If actual developments follow this course, the United Nations not only will have the habit of consulting before the war ends but will have already in operation much of the international machinery needed to maintain an enduring peace. The United States Senate will not have to decide whether or not this Government should "join" a League of Nations or any other blueprinted organization. We will already have been collaborating, through machinery which we will have been largely responsible for creating. This can be expanded or modified as the practical needs arise.

Labor May Cancel Its Pledge Not to Strike, CIO Leader Says

Warming that "the patience of our members will not last forever," James B. Carey, secretary of the C. I. O., said last night that unless Congress stops heeding the pleas of "special interest groups," labor will have to abandon its pledge to cooperate in wage stabilization.

He spoke as a member of a four-man panel which discussed "Controlling the Cost of Living" on the American Forum of the Air broadcast by Mutual from the Shoreham Hotel. Other speakers were J. Kenneth Galbraith, deputy OPA administrator in charge of prices; Ralph E. Flanders, public member of the board of the Office of Economic Stabilization, and Senator Joseph C. O'Mahoney.

Senate approval of the Bankhead bill, failure to provide incentive payments to farmers, and the House defeat of the President's $67,200-a-year limit on individual income were cited by Carey, who declared:

Labor Respects Pledges

"Up until now labor unions have offered evidence of their willingness to cooperate in wage stabilization and have steadily urged their members to accept the decisions of the War Labor Board. Labor respects its pledges and expects others to do the same. But the patience of our members will not last forever. Unless prices, salaries and profits are promptly stabilized, wages will have to be increased.

Galbraith, who observed that the principle of stabilization was far easier to accept than the practice, said there is more money to spend now than there are goods to buy.

"People tend to get into competition one with another," he said "and bid up the prices of what is available. Left to themselves, living costs would rise very rapidly indeed.

A Snowballing Affair

"This is serious enough in itself," Galbraith continued. "But it is a snowballing affair—things get worse from step to step. If living costs rise, there will be compensating increases in industrial earnings in wages and farm income all for the purpose of effecting the higher cost of living.

"But these higher wages and incomes mean still more purchasing power. The supply of purchasing power really begins to outrun the supply of goods. It is possible to increase the output of food, clothing and the like, but it isn't possible to increase that part of the supply available for civilian use."

U. S. Burlap Purchases To Speed India's Looms

The Board of Economic Warfare and the Defense Supplies Corp. announced arrangements yesterday to buy 150 million yards of burlap in India. The Indian textile industry has agreed to lengthen working schedules and put 100 per cent of its idle looms to work to speed delivery.

Warworkers' Efforts Stressed By First Lady

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt told several hundred warworkers at the Pan American Union's weekly concert yesterday that they are making "an important contribution to the war effort by working in the Government," and that news of this work would "certainly help keep up the morale of the people back home."

She declared further that the "problem confronting the Nation is not merely one of winning the war but of building a postwar world that will justify the sacrifices that the present war entail."

Highly praised by the First Lady were the recreational programs given for warworkers.

"They represent a distinct contribution to maintaining the morale of the workers at a high level," she declared. Her appearance yesterday was the second visit she has made to the weekly concerts, which began early this year.

The performers were Mme. Genia Ury, singer; Elena Crivella, pianist, and Terry La Franconi, also a singer, from Mexico City.

Only an epidemic could do it today

YES—in wartime only an epidemic could halt the assembly line, confine workers to their homes, and stop the flow of critical war supplies in this great plant!

No—there is no epidemic.

But there could be—without warning—if the sanitation facilities should break down.

One of the ways this could happen is if the supply of toilet tissue were suddenly cut off. For toilet tissue—a type of paper that disintegrates readily in water—is essential to American plumbing systems. Pipes must not clog.

For generations Scott paper products have played their part in sanitation and, insofar as the war effort permits, they will be kept available for all American homes . . . the Scott name will continue to assure the highest standards of quality, comfort and cleanliness. Scott Paper Co., Chester, Pa.

War Dept. Turns Down Louis-Conn Bout

WASHINGTON, MAR. 15, 1943

WouldHinder Army Plans, Says Surles

Proposed Scrap Would Interfere With Training of Champ, Challenger

By the Associated Press

Pittsburgh, March 14.—The War Department again has turned down a proposal that Corpl. Billy Conn and Sergt. Joe Louis be permitted to fight for the world's heavyweight championship.

Maj. Gen. A. D. Surles, public relations director for the War Department, declared in a letter to Sportswriter Al Abrams of the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette, that "such a match would interfere with the training and assignments of both Conn and Louis and the War Department is not willing to authorize such a match at the present time."

Abrams, who recently quoted Conn as saying he was willing to fight Louis "for nothing," had suggested to the War Department that the match be held with war bonds being sold for admission.

Surles wrote Abrams "it is not in the national interest for the War Department either to sponsor or to authorize such a boxing engagement."

Nine Hurlers Report To Nats' Spring Camp

Dutch Leonard's Knee Reported Sound; Pitchers Wynn, Haefner Among Missing

Up the pike a couple of miles from the Hyattsville, Md., home of Rookie Manager Ossie Bluege, the vanguard of the Nats' spring training contingent, nine pitchers and one catcher, were bedded down for the night on the Maryland University campus.

The morning reveille will sound at 9 a. m. for the athletes and an hour later they will be on the field adjacent Ritchie Coliseum for the first workout of the year.

"They'll work out at 10 a. m. barring the morning dew," said Bluege. "It can be thick, you know. We'll get on the field if it's dry."

Ventured No Opinions

Bluege eagerly scanned the rookie squad that reported to him yesterday, but ventured no opinions. "I see Dutch Leonard and Alex Carrasquel," he said, "and I'm glad they're around. It looks like they'll have to do a lot of the pitching."

Aside from Leonard and the Venezuelan Carrasquel, Bluege saw none among the squad to give him any special comfort. He was a bit perturbed when little Milton Haefner, left-hander bought from Minneapolis, failed to put in an appearance, but was relieved to learn Haefner was en route.

Leonard weighed in at 215 pounds on the Ritchie Coliseum scales and drew a compliment from Trainer Mike Martin on his weight. "That big guy is thinner than he ever was before at the start of spring training," said Martin.

Leonard declared the broken leg he suffered last April, which kept him out of the line-up until the last month of the season, has completely recovered.

"That leg isn't going to bother me at all," said the big knuckle baller. "It hasn't given me any trouble all winter, and I won't have to favor it. I'm anxious to make up for the poor season I had in 1942." Leonard took a voluntary salary cut when he signed his 1943 contract.

Other absentees besides Haefner were Early Wynn, right-hander from last year's staff, who is expected to report today; Catcher Angelo Giuliani, detained at his Minneapolis home by the birth of a child to Mrs. Giuliani; and Donald Barbary, rookie catcher from Chattanooga.

Has Added Starter

Bluege discovered he had an added starter in Richard Ahrens, towering seven-foot rookie from Oil City, Pa., whom Scout Joe Cambria brought into camp. Ahrens has no organized baseball experience but comes highly recommended from semi-pro ranks. Cambria outbid the Baltimore Orioles to get his signature on a contract.

Milo Candini, right-hander bought from the Yankees, reported the injured throwing arm which plagued him last season with the Newark club has been giving him no trouble. "I think I'm ready to pitch," said Candini.

Coach Clyde Milan has been appointed monitor of the housing situation of the players on the campus. They will sleep two to a room in a dormitory across the highway from the field, and take their meals in a private dining room on the campus.

Giants Head Uline Rassle Card Tonight

Wrestling Goliaths are to headline the Liberty Athletic Club's five-event show set for Uline Arena tonight at 8:30 o'clock.

In the one fall, finish main event bewhiskered, 318-pound Man Mountain Dean is matched with 303-pound Bob (The Golden Terror) Stewart. The ring will be reinforced to withstand the pressure of the 621 pounds and a referee.

The Terror very nearly precipitated a riot at ringside here recently when he worked to a spectacular draw with popular Pat Fraley, while Dean handily crushed big Tony Milano on the same card.

A novelty attraction tonight will find the Purple Flash, the first masked woman ever to compete locally, making her debut against attractive Gladys Gillmen, of Birmingham, Ala.

Melton Signs, Giants List 23 Players

Holdout Bartell Expected to Accept Terms Soon; Majors Open Spring Camps

By the Associated Press

Lakewood, N. J., March 14.—Cliff Melton, big lefthanded pitcher, signed his 1943 contract today and joined a squad of 22 New York Giants who assembled here for the start of spring training.

Infielder Dick Bartell, still a holdout, was also present, and Manager Mel Ott indicated he expected the veteran to come to terms shortly.

Aside from First Baseman Johnny Mize and Catcher Harry Danning, who are at their homes awaiting induction, the most important absentees are Pitcher Ace Adams and Infielder Lee Handley. Both are working at other jobs and are uncertain about reporting for baseball.

Small Phil Squad Out

Philadelphia, March 14 (AP).—The Philadelphia Phillies begin training at Hershey, Pa., tomorrow with one of the smallest squads ever to report to a big league spring camp.

If all the players who have signed contracts or agreed to terms show up, the squad will number only 17, including five untried rookies, two of whom are owned by one of the Phillies' farm clubs.

William D. Cox, new owner of the club, still was awaiting word today from Commissioner Kenesaw M. Landis on his appeal for a review of the trade whereby the Phillies sent First Baseman Nick Etten to the New York Yankees in exchange for Pitcher Allen Gettel, First Baseman Ed Levy, and cash. Gettel has said he will stay at his farm and Levy has not answered communications from the Phillies' office.

Dodgers Make Camp

Bear Mountain, N. Y., March 14 (AP).—A "scouting party" of eight Brooklyn Dodger players arrived today in the company of club officials and newspapermen to establish spring training headquarters.

The initial contingent included Pitchers Curt Davis, Newt Kimball and Les Webber, Catcher Ray Hayworth, Infielders Billy Herman and Albie Glossop and Outfielders Augie Galan and Luis Rodriguez Olmo, Puerto Rican rookie.

Manager Leo Durocher was due on a night train and other players were expected tomorrow and Tuesday, but nothing has been heard from such holdouts as Pitchers Buck Newsom and Frank (Rube) Melton or from Outfielder Dixie Walker, recreation director for a war plant who has expressed doubt about returning to baseball.

Catcher Mickey Owen was understood to be planning to come East from his Missouri farm to discuss terms with President Branch Rickey in New York.

Four Yanks Absent

Asbury Park, N. J., March 14 (AP).—There were four notable absentees today as the vanguard of the New York Yankee batterymen arrived for the opening of spring training tomorrow.

Catcher Bill Dickey and Pitchers Ernie (Tiny) Bonham, Spud Chandler and Atley Donald had not reported by nightfall and will be classed officially as holdouts if they still are absent when Manager Joe McCarthy calls the roll for the first time tomorrow.

Bonham, however, was quoted as saying on the West Coast that the terms offered him were satisfactory.

A special delivery of fuel oil made it possible for the athletes to sleep in warm rooms their first night here. The Yankees have taken over two floors in a hotel which were closed off for the winter and the need for a permit for additional fuel was forgotten until the last minute.

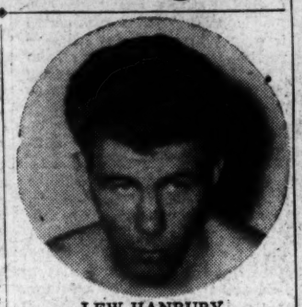
Petro, Stewart Clash At Turner's Tonight

Hanbury Booked To Meet Phillips In Eight-Rounder



LEW HANBURY

Danny Petro, the "Walloping Wop" from Southeast with the kick of a mule in his left hand, tonight takes on the dangerous Wayman Stewart, local Negro, in the 8-round feature scrap of Promoter Joe Turner's weekly card at Turner's Arena. It should be a repeat blood and thunder event.

Danny, who is awaiting the call from Uncle Sam, expects this to be his last fight for the duration. Wayman, with whom Danny staged a real barroom brawl a couple of months ago, is serving in this case as a substitute for Lou Transparenti of Baltimore, who hurt his hand training.

Fought a Real Brawl

Their last fight was a scorcher. First Stewart and then Danny were ready for the count. Neither used the slightest bit of boxing science but both were winding up and throwing their Sunday punches—Wayman's a roundhouse right and Danny's an equally "from the heels" left. Eventually the bout was stopped in the eighth when Stewart received a badly cut eye.

Both went to the hospital, Stewart for three days and Danny for several eye stitches.

Tonight Danny has promised to unveil a right hand against the local Negro. And Stewart, realizing that had he used a straight left against Danny would have probably won, has, likewise, been learning to stick with his left. But like the last time, if either or both get hurt, it is likely scientific endeavor will go out the window and they again will resort to the slugging tactics which made their last meeting so terrific.

Lew Hanbury on Card

Lew Hanbury, another local featherweight who has challenged the winner of the Petro-Stewart scrap, returns to the wars after breaking his hand while training for a recent bout with Willie Pep, and will meet Jimmy Phillips, conqueror of Roy Lewis and Bernie Cady.

Hanbury's only professional defeat came at the hands of Stewart—Lew's second fight of his career—and he is more than anxious to erase that blot. Also, Lew has visions of a possible Petro bout should Danny emerge the winner, in a fight that would probably be recognized as for the featherweight championship of the District.

Two sixes and a four complete the card. Leon Kennedy tackles Lee Rosan and Willie Starr faces Billy Morris in the sixes, while Jay Irwin will oppose Hershal Todd in the curtain-raising four.—AL COSTELLO.

Breen Takes Lucky Strike 'Dub' Handicap

Rolling a remarkable second-five game block of 700, an all-time record, Francis X. Breen of St. Aloysius-Booster League yesterday won the fifteenth annual Bill Wood "Dub" Handicap at Lucky Strike with a 1288 total. Breen also enjoyed an 18-pin handicap. He shot a 570 total in the afternoon block.

Breen's record-breaking string was compiled by putting together games of 154, 142, 129, 138 and 137.

Travis H. Brewer of American League, Silver Spring, last year's winner, was second with 1197, including a 12-pin handicap, 91 pins behind Breen. Harry Blumenthan of Penn Recreation was third with a 1188 total.

Carlotta Denning of Veteran's Administration League led the field of 50 women with 1135, including a 90-pin handicap. Phyllis Kimball of Rebecca Lodge was second with a total of 1094.

Christoforidis Quits; Has Plenty of Money

Cleveland, March 14 (AP).—Promoter Bob Brickman tonight announced cancellation of the 10-round fight scheduled for March 24 between Lightheavyweight Anton Christoforidis of Geneva, Ohio, and Lloyd Marshall of San Francisco.

"Christoforidis said he didn't care to fight any more and that he had plenty of money," Brickman asserted.

Norfolk Navy Five Defeats, Brewers, 50-40

The crack Norfolk Training Station quint, featuring George Washington's Matt Zunic and Gene Mako, of pro tennis fame, turned back Washington's Heurich Brewers yesterday, 50-40, in their weekly United Nations' Club game at Heurich gym yesterday. A near-capacity crowd of 900 was on hand.

Zunic tallied eight points and Mako six, but the Sailors' high scorer was Gibbs, center, who registered 17 points through the medium of six field goals and five free tosses. "Whitey" Wilson led the way for the Brewers with 13 points.

In a fast preliminary, Postoffice defeated the Marines, 48-39. Seaton for Postoffice and Moran for the Marines each tallied 20 points.

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

The Nats' eight-mile trek to spring training camp yesterday was very un-thrilling. The athletes assembled at Griffith Stadium in the morning, piled into cars, hit the back road to College Park, and 15 minutes later were being shown to their rooms on the University of Maryland campus.

POVICH

Clark Griffith, who likes to rib baseball writers, said "this ought to be down your alley. You lazy guys can come out to Griffith Stadium, climb a light tower, and cover our training camp by telescope."

Including the coaches and Manager Ossie Bluege, there were 13 members of the team in the party when photographers lined 'em up on the field for a picture. But Business Manager Edward B. Eynon, jr., remedied that. "Get us another man of some kind in that picture," he commanded. "We can't start off with any number like 13." From the clubhuose, Assistant Trainer Frankie Baxter was fetched to pose with the squad and take the curse off the picture.

For the first hour, Trainer Mike Martin was wandering in a daze after inspecting the layout in his trainer's quarters. They had led him to a room that contained not one, but three rubbing tables. He saw physiotherapy gadgets, countless heat appliances, snow-white appointments and a clean floor, and it was too much for Mike.

"I've heard of places like this, but I never thought we'd make it," babbled Mike. "Those ball players won't know how to behave in a room like this. It'll probably scare 'em. They used to come running to me with all kinds of imaginary ailments, but before they come in here they'll be desperate."

Somebody counted the squad and said there were ten ball players present, exclusive of coaches, but Martin differed. "Not ten ball players," he said, "nine pitchers and one catcher. Pitchers ain't ball players. Most of 'em don't know which end of a bat to use, can't run, and never have learned to bunt. All they can do is throw, and some of these probably can't throw much. Don't call pitchers ball players."

Manager Ossie Bluege found himself confronted with an immediate problem: where to get a uniform for Rookie Pitcher Richard Ahrens, a mountainous 7-foot specimen who wears size 16½ shoes. Young Mr. Ahrens was corraled in the wilds of Oil City, Pa., by the intrepid Washington scout, Joe Cambria.

"I found him in a grocery store," relates Cambria. "He was behind the counter reaching for some cans on the top shelf, and when I saw him I thought he was standing on a ladder. But I didn't see any ladder, so I signed him."

Cambria thus keeps his record intact. Each year he has delivered to the Nats' camp some kind of a phenomenon. Until this year he had been running to Cubans, Venezuelans, Mexicans and others of the Latin legion, but apparently he has worn out that territory.

"I grabbed this Ahrens when I learned that the Baltimore club was ready to sign him. Baltimore got a great recommendation on him from men who saw him pitch in semipro ranks," said Cambria. "Besides, he's a great basketball player."

The last is a fact. Ahrens was some shucks as a basketball player. He was on that famous Long Island University team that won the Madison Square Garden Tournament in 1937. Coach Claire Bee called him the best center in Long Island's history.

His basketball background will come in handy for Ahrens in the Nats' training camp. He brought his basketball shoes along with him and will work out in them until the manufacturers create a pair of baseball shoes of his size. The matter of outfitting Mr. Seven Foot in a baseball uniform is also a current problem for the manufacturers. Until they come up with something, he'll work in a sweatshirt and slacks.

Ahrens is safe from the Army. He holds some kind of a 4-Z card. The Army rejected him because he was a half-foot taller than the 6-6 limit, despite the fact that he was a noncommissioned officer in the Pennsylvania State Guard for several years. He's 25 years old.

Can the guy pitch? "I dunno," said Cambria. "His size won't hurt him, though. He had to be pretty graceful to play with the championship basketball team. When he lifts his leg and starts pitching, though, the batter is not going to have much time to make up his mind."

Earl Smith, Ex-Nat Outfielder, Dies

Portsmouth, Ohio, March 14 (AP). Earl Smith, former American League outfielder for 10 years with the Washington Nationals and the St. Louis Browns, died today.

For the last year he had been working as a plumber and pipefitter at a nearby war plant. During his baseball career, Smith also played with the Columbus and Minneapolis clubs in the American Association, managed the Beckley (W. Va.) club in the Mountain State League, and umpired in the Mid-Atlantic.

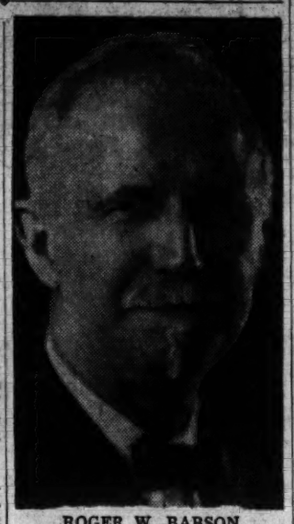
Factional Strife

By Roger W. Babson

Too Much Internal Bickering

Business volume continues at exceptionally high levels. A rising output of war materials has been fed by record productions in steel, electric power and other basic industries. High wages and increased spending power have boosted retail business.

At the same time many non-essential businesses have suffered. For most businessmen, regardless of their occupation, the days since Pearl Harbor have been filled with uncertainty and confusion. What the future holds for business now depends more upon leadership than upon orders.



ROGER W. BABSON

If the president and the chairman of the board of a corporation are in disagreement, they can usually through some third party be made to bury the hatchet for the good of the company. Probably if only two or three individuals were responsible for the administration of our war effort, we would be much further along the road to a solution of our business problems and to the winning of the war. But it is characteristic of a democracy such as ours that factional competition exists.

Hence, we have labor and capital, farmers and wage workers, a two-party political system, stockholders and management and a host of other competing groups at each other's throats. A serious example of factionalism at the moment is the New Dealers vs. businessmen in Washington. Another is Congress vs. Administration leaders also, of course, in Washington.

It is interesting to note, as illustrative of the change in world affairs, that we no longer hear talk of the importance of London as a business or financial center. New York City is destined to become the most important city of the world. This is one reason why I am bullish on certain New York City bank stocks and real estate.

We shall not know until the end of the war how many of our plane crashes, industrial fires, train wrecks, absentees and declines in production are due to sabotage. Thanks to Mr. Hoover and his FBI I believe such acts are being kept to a minimum. I wish all Government agencies in proportion to their size and cost were as efficiently operated as the FBI. If all bureaus produced such good results, we would have little fear for our war effort and for our economic future.

In spite of discouraging days and news I am optimistic for business. Certainly, out of the war and our domestic struggles much good will come. I would, however, be more enthusiastic over the immediate outlook if it were not for the great sabotage of effort, much of it perhaps unconscious, by some of our national groups and figures. For instance, we have Congress spending more time chasing Administration bureaucrats than in passing constructive legislation to simplify and speed up manpower, wage, tax, price and other vital matters.

Orders for certain types of war goods have been quietly cancelled for some weeks past in favor of increased production in what are now more important lines. Possibly, the placement of war orders has reached a peak. Somewhere in the armament field, limits are necessarily met in materials, men and machines. Limits in agricultural production may also be met in terms of farm implements and manpower. Hence, we have more factional disputes as to what is more important—war weapons, a still larger army, or a tin of milk and a pound butter for everyone outside of the United States of America!

The discussion of the Ruml Plan, which, incidentally, I favor, is a further example of a serious factional dispute. The lack of courage on the party of the Treasury Department, shown by their willingness to finance the war through bank borrowings, is a factional matter which, if continued, will surely bring on inflation. Washington still looks too much to the employment of bank funds instead of Government bonds which would gladly be brought by individuals if the rate were 3 per cent and if the bonds would always be accepted at par for tax payments.

If I have any one criticism to make of conditions today it is this: There is too much fighting on the home front and too little on the battle front. That alone is a good example of bad factionalism. However, we all realize that military campaigns take an enormous amount of planning and time to become effective. We have every reason to be proud of our military leaders. With faith and patience, we can leave the final battle results in their hands.

Business and labor leaders, Administration heads and Congressmen, farmers and workers, politicians and patriots, manufacturers and merchants should stop fighting. Any such who confuse issues, disrupt business, use war-time necessities for personal profit or power should be ferreted out and hamstrung for the duration. In this connection the problem of absenteeism should be impartially studied by every plant to ascertain what percentage is due to liquor. I fear it is very great. To avoid serious consequences on our home front we, everywhere, now need courageous non-partisian leadership and the self-discipline evident in our armed forces.

NOTE: The last clause in the first paragraph of last week's article should have read: "when agriculture is revolutionized" instead of "when no more fertilizers can be purchased."—R. W. B.

Orchestra Group To Conclude Its Conference Today

The Women's Committees for Symphony Orchestras will conclude their three-day biennial conference today with a business meeting at 10:30 a. m. and a large luncheon at 12:30 p. m. in the Statler Hotel.

Delegates from 17 cities and the District of Columbia will make reports and discuss all problems effecting the symphony orchestras at the morning session.

Among those to be present at the luncheon are Mrs. Henry Wallace, wife of the Vice President, Mrs. Thomas Holcomb, wife of the commandant of the Marine Corps; and Archibald MacLeish, librarian of Congress, and Dr. Hans Kindler, conductor of the National Symphony Orchestra. Mrs. Walter Bruce Howe, chairman of the local women's committee, will preside.

The delegates were luncheon guests yesterday of Mrs. Joseph E. Davies, wife of the former Ambassador to Russia, and later of the National Symphony Orchestra concert in Constitution Hall. Tonight they will be entertained at the National Gallery of Art by Gallery Director David E. Finley.

Ringside Table

With Mary Harris

ROXYETTE TO GLEN ECHO. Joan Ritter, one of the Earle Theater's cunningest Roxyettes, will become an orchestra singer on April 10 when she'll join Paul Kain's band at the opening of Glen Echo. Joan has a lovely voice and the hard-to-please Maestro Kain vows she has wonderful possibilities . . . Treasure Island, where the Kain orchestra is currently holding forth, will stage a farewell party in Paul's honor on Wednesday, March 24—though he and his band don't actually leave until the following Saturday. On Monday, March 29, Maestro Jack Neal, now at Hi Hat, will open as a solo piano and vocal artist at Treasure Island. It's a merry-go-round, isn't it? P. S.: Treasure Island also bulletins that they're going to have a greata, bigga St. Patrick's Day party.

Dick Himber's nationally-known dance band will open tonight at Del Rio. It's the second Himberian visit to Del Rio within the last few months.

YOUNG CHINA, in the persons of the dancing Sen Wongs, will star in the new Lotus floor show opening today. The Sen Wongs flourished in the international atmosphere of Hongkong's colorful cafes before the Nips became too obstreperous. Their dances combine modern ballroom steps with a mystic Celestial touch. Also in the revue are the acrobatic Maxwells, Danny Murray in a musical novelty act. The Lotus Dancettes will be doing a "Hobbyhorse Gallop."

LA MARR IS MORAND FIXTURE. Mary La Marr, one of Washington's finest little songbirds, is now permanently affiliated with José Morand's band playing in the Carlton's Cosmos Room. When the orchestra leaves Washington in a few weeks, Mary will be going along. She's very happy about it, and naturally! We heard this grand news in Restaurant "823" where Mary was dining with Maestro Morand and two of his bandsmen, Steve Pappola and Buddy Miller.

Emil Coleman and his orchestra, who have stood for the sounder melody values in "society dance music" for these many years, will open at the Hotel Statler's Embassy Room on Thursday.

OF GREATA BIGGA PARTIES. Pete Macias' fourth anniversary party at the Lounge Riviera happened to fall on the birthday of pretty Mickey Sterling. So she helped Pete to cut the cake. . . . A huge party in honor of champ golfer "Wiffy" Cox was recently tossed at the Ambassador Hotel. Among the guests who dropped into the Hi Hat later was dark-eyed Angie Rodante who used to sing there. . . . The reason you couldn't get into the Rainbow Room a couple of times recently was because of those monumental Census Bureau and telephone company soirees. . . . High ranking Army officers and their wives and sweethearts filled one side of Troika at the goodbye party given for Maj. Curtis Dall, former son-in-law of F. D. R. . . . A flock of English officers and American WAVES recently celebrated in the Dubonnet Room.

Members of the Chinese Embassy staff are among the most prized fans of the Rocco Terrone group playing at Mayfair. They always sit near the Terrone piano, request many unusual continental numbers.

whose fourth anniversary party at the Lounge Riviera was a carnival of fun and good wishes

SERVICE ANGLES. Teddy Powell, topflight maestro now at the Victory Room, was almost in uniform—until the medicos discovered something wrong with his sacroiliac. "And to think I never knew I had one," says Teddy. . . . Billy McIntyre, crack emcee opening with the new Casino Royal show today, will be there for only one week, then he's off to camp . . . Violinist Durward Bowersox of Burt's Trans-Lux has just received a bid for a date from the Man with the Whiskers. . . . Turk, of Jerry and Turk, opening at Paul Young's on Wednesday, has promised Paul to stay until he gets a ticket to a training camp. . . . Eddie Chase, who used to play piano in the Pall Mall Room, came visiting there recently. He's a nifty looking sailor. . . . It's a caution how men in blue gravitate to the Anchor Room. Firstly, they're attracted by the name. Then Matt Windsor's piano and Polly Parker's songs prove their hunch right. Next thing you know they're telling all the other sailors to go to the Anchor Room. . . . Bob Pace, who used to sing in the King Cole Room, is now a Marine. He tells us that the Marines are seeing the cream of the movies weeks before the general public.

Al Simmonds, the genie of the Brown Derby, is planning to bust out the walls or something. He's gotta have more room! One definite decision is that the Brown Derby is going to have a new dance floor in back. Don't ask us what's going to happen to the kitchen.

SWEETER'N SUGAR. "Stick to Your Knittin', Kitten," new tune being done by El Patio's Little Jack Little . . . "Love's Old Sweet Song" as sung soft 'n low by Lyn Turner of the Old New Orleans . . . "Mammy's Lullaby," newest brain child of Godfrey Straub, pianist of the Neptune Room . . . The gay bird call number often played by violinist Venesko of the Balalaika.

Morgan's Body to Be Cremated

By the Associated Press

New York, March 14 — With the same privacy in which he sought to live, John Pierpont Morgan, head of a fabulous financial organization, will be laid to rest Tuesday morning.

There will be no flowers, nor will friends and associates be permitted to view the body. The family spokesman, however, said the services will be conducted in St. George's Protestant Episcopal Church at Stuyvesant Square by the Rev. Rush R. Sloane, rector of St. John's Church of Lattingtown, Locust Valley, Long Island. Morgan was senior warden and a regular attendant at St. John's in recent years while living at his Matinecock estate near Glen Cove.

The banker died yesterday in his vacation cottage at Boca Grande, Fla. He was 75. His father, J. Pierpont Morgan, also was 75 when he died in Rome on March 31, 1913.

The body is scheduled to arrive in New York in a private railroad car tomorrow morning. Morgan's younger son, Lieut. Comdr. Henry Sturgis Morgan, and his younger daughter, Mrs. Paul G. Pennoyer, will accompany it to New York, and it will be taken to the Morgan Library at 29 East Thirty-sixth Street.

After the funeral the body will be taken to the Fresh Pond Crematory at Middle Village, Queens, and the ashes will be taken to Hartford, Conn., where his wife and others of the Morgan family are buried.

The financier had made annual trips to Hartford since the death of his wife, Jane Norton Grew Morgan, in 1925.

Services Mark Anniversary of Austria's Fall

Punishment of the guilty for "the rape of Austria" was demanded by the Very Rev. Ignatius Smith, O. P., yesterday at one of the two services marking the fifth anniversary of Austria's fall.

Msgr. Smith, dean of Catholic University's school of philosophy, preached at solemn high mass in the National Shrine of the Immaculate Conception before 100 worshipers, including Archduke Otto and other diplomatic, legislative and religious figures, as well as several Austrian members of the university faculty.

The archduke, who sat beside the Right Rev. Patrick J. McCormick, acting university vice rector, was accompanied by his aide, Count Edmund Czernin, and Walter von Schuschnigg, first cousin of Austria's last chancellor, Kurt von Schuschnigg, who was arrested by the Gestapo in March, 1938, and is said to be interned near Berlin.

Declaring justice demanded that Austria's woes be remembered, Msgr. Smith said that "this does not mean that Christian love and mercy are to be abandoned and that barbaric hatred is to be the cornerstone of a new day, but it does mean that Christian justice in all its phases must prevail.

"Such justice demands that outrages against the natural and divine law must be punished," he continued, "both because the balance of justice must be restored and also because retribution and punishment will serve to prevent the repetition of such outrages in the future.

"The innocent must be spared, but the guilty must be punished by the requirements of that special virtue which is called vindictive justice," he said.

"It must be remembered that such partial Christians and pagans have attempted to take out of God's religion the concept of divine and eternal punishment; they have eliminated the discipline of punishment from the home and the school; they have crippled political society in the administration of justice by turning penitentiaries into country clubs; they would turn international society into a barbaric jungle by permitting international crime to go unpunished."

The Rev. Thomas Michels, O. S. B., formerly dean of the University of Salzburg, celebrated the mass, at which the Sulpician Choir sang.

The Archduke and fellow-Austrians went last night to another memorial service at Ezras Israel Synagogue, Eighth and I Streets Northwest.

Bringing greetings at the Jewish service, the Archduke said that the fact that both Jews and Catholics are uttering prayers for early Allied victory and for liberation of Austria is symbolic of the common fight of all God-made religions against the Nazi "man-made religion of paganism."

War Dept. Turns Down Louis-Conn Bout

WASHINGTON, MAR. 15, 1943

WouldHinder Army Plans, Says Surles

By the Associated Press

Pittsburgh, March 14.—The War Department again has turned down a proposal that Corpl. Billy Conn and Sergt. Joe Louis be permitted to fight for the world's heavyweight championship.

Maj. Gen. A. D. Surles, public relations director for the War Department, declared in a letter to Sportswriter Al Abrams of the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette, that "such a match would interfere with the training and assignments of both Conn and Louis and the War Department is not willing to authorize such a match at the present time."

Abrams, who recently quoted Conn as saying he was willing to fight Louis "for nothing," had suggested to the War Department that the match be held with war bonds being sold for admission.

Surles wrote Abrams "it is not in the national interest for the War Department either to sponsor or to authorize such a boxing engagement."

Nats to Play One Holiday Bill at Home

The Nats and Athletics will usher in the major league baseball season on April 20, a day ahead of games scheduled in other major league cities, it was revealed yesterday by release of the American League schedule for 1943.

Only one holiday date at home was assigned the Nats during the season. On Decoration Day, May 31, they will meet the Cleveland Indians in a double-header. On July 4, they meet the Browns in St. Louis, and on Labor Day they battle the Red Sox at Boston.

Twenty-one of the Nats' home games will be played at night, starting on May 7, when the Red Sox come to Griffith Stadium.

The schedule features three Western trips for the Eastern teams, and vice versa, instead of the usual four swings, because of travel restrictions.

Mr. Seven-Foot Comes to Nats

Manager Ossie Bluege inspects Rookie Pitcher Richard Ahrens, 7-foot youth who played center on Long Island U.'s championship basketball team of 1937. Ahrens was rejected by the Army on account of his height. He pitched semipro ball in Pennsylvania last season

Nine Hurlers Report To Nats' Spring Camp

Dutch Leonard's Knee Reported Sound; Pitchers Wynn, Haefner Among Missing

Up the pike a couple of miles from the Hyattsville, Md., home of Rookie Manager Ossie Bluege, the vanguard of the Nats' spring training contingent, nine pitchers and one catcher, were bedded down for the night on the Maryland University campus.

The morning reveille will sound at 9 a. m. for the athletes and an hour later they will be on the field adjacent Ritchie Coliseum for the first workout of the year.

"They'll work out at 10 a. m. barring the morning dew," said Bluege. "It can be thick, you know. We'll get on the field if it's dry."

Ventured No Opinions

Bluege eagerly scanned the rookie squad that reported to him yesterday, but ventured no opinions. "I see Dutch Leonard and Alex Carrasquel," he said, "and I'm glad they're around. It looks like they'll have to do a lot of the pitching."

Aside from Leonard and the Venezuelan Carrasquel, Bluege saw none among the squad to give him any special comfort. He was a bit perturbed when little Milton Haefner, left-hander bought from Minneapolis, failed to put in an appearance, but was relieved to learn Haefner was en route.

Leonard weighed in at 215 pounds on the Ritchie Coliseum scales and drew a compliment from Trainer Mike Martin on his weight. "That big guy is thinner than he ever was before at the start of spring training," said Martin.

Leonard declared the broken leg he suffered last April, which kept him out of the line-up until the last month of the season, has completely recovered.

"That leg isn't going to bother me at all," said the big knuckle baller. "It hasn't given me any trouble all winter, and I won't have to favor it. I'm anxious to make up for the poor season I had in 1942." Leonard took a voluntary salary cut when he signed his 1943 contract.

Other absentees besides Haefner were Early Wynn, right-hander from last year's staff, who is expected to report today; Catcher Angelo Giuliani, detained at his Minneapolis home by the birth of a child to Mrs. Giuliani; and Donald Barbary, rookie catcher from Chattanooga.

Has Added Starter

Bluege discovered he had an added starter in Richard Ahrens, towering seven-foot rookie from Oil City, Pa., whom Scout Joe Cambria brought into camp. Ahrens has no organized baseball experience but comes highly recommended from semi-pro ranks. Cambria outbid the Baltimore Orioles to get his signature on a contract.

Milo Candini, right-hander bought from the Yankees, reported the injured throwing arm which plagued him last season with the Newark club has been giving him no trouble. "I think I'm ready to pitch," said Candini.

Coach Clyde Milan has been appointed monitor of the housing situation of the players on the campus. They will sleep two to a room in a dormitory across the highway from the field, and take their meals in a private dining room on the campus.

Giants Head Uline Rassle Card Tonight

Wrestling Goliaths are to headline the Liberty Athletic Club's five-event show set for Uline Arena tonight at 8:30 o'clock.

In the one fall, finish main event bewhiskered, 318-pound Man Mountain Dean is matched with 303-pound Bob (The Golden Terror) Stewart. The ring will be reinforced to withstand the pressure of the 621 pounds and a referee.

The Terror very nearly precipitated a riot at ringside here recently when he worked to a spectacular draw with popular Pat Fraley, while Dean handily crushed big Tony Milano on the same card.

A novelty attraction tonight will find the Purple Flash, the first masked woman ever to compete locally, making her debut against attractive Gladys Gillmen, of Birmingham, Ala.

Melton Signs, Giants List 23 Players

Holdout Bartell Expected to Accept Terms Soon; Majors Open Spring Camps

By the Associated Press

Lakewood, N. J., March 14.—Cliff Melton, big lefthanded pitcher, signed his 1943 contract today and joined a squad of 22 New York Giants who assembled here for the start of spring training.

Infielder Dick Bartell, still a holdout, was also present, and Manager Mel Ott indicated he expected the veteran to come to terms shortly.

Aside from First Baseman Johnny Mize and Catcher Harry Danning, who are at their homes awaiting induction, the most important absentees are Pitcher Ace Adams and Infielder Lee Handley. Both are working at other jobs and are uncertain about reporting for baseball.

Small Phil Squad Out

Philadelphia, March 14 (AP).—The Philadelphia Phillies begin training at Hershey, Pa., tomorrow with one of the smallest squads ever to report to a big league spring camp.

If all the players who have signed contracts or agreed to terms show up, the squad will number only 17, including five untried rookies, two of whom are owned by one of the Phillies' farm clubs.

William D. Cox, new owner of the club, still was awaiting word today from Commissioner Kenesaw M. Landis on his appeal for a review of the trade whereby the Phillies sent First Baseman Nick Etten to the New York Yankees in exchange for Pitcher Allen Gettel, First Baseman Ed Levy, and cash. Gettel has said he will stay at his farm and Levy has not answered communications from the Phillies' office.

Dodgers Make Camp

Bear Mountain, N. Y., March 14 (AP).—A "scouting party" of eight Brooklyn Dodger players arrived today in the company of club officials and newspapermen to establish spring training headquarters.

The initial contingent included Pitchers Curt Davis, Newt Kimball and Les Webber, Catcher Ray Hayworth, Infielders Billy Herman and Albie Glossop and Outfielders Augie Galan and Luis Rodriguez Olmo, Puerto Rican rookie.

Manager Leo Durocher was due on a night train and other players were expected tomorrow and Tuesday, but nothing has been heard from such holdouts as Pitchers Buck Newsom and Frank (Rube) Melton or from Outfielder Dixie Walker, recreation director for a war plant who has expressed doubt about returning to baseball.

Catcher Mickey Owen was understood to be planning to come East from his Missouri farm to discuss terms with President Branch Rickey in New York.

Four Yanks Absent

Asbury Park, N. J., March 14 (AP).—There were four notable absentees today as the vanguard of the New York Yankee batterymen arrived for the opening of spring training tomorrow.

Catcher Bill Dickey and Pitchers Ernie (Tiny) Bonham, Spud Chandler and Atley Donald had not reported by nightfall and will be classed officially as holdouts if they still are absent when Manager Joe McCarthy calls the roll for the first time tomorrow.

Bonham, however, was quoted as saying on the West Coast that the terms offered him were satisfactory.

A special delivery of fuel oil made it possible for the athletes to sleep in warm rooms their first night here. The Yankees have taken over two floors in a hotel which were closed off for the winter and the need for a permit for additional fuel was forgotten until the last minute.

Petro, Stewart Clash At Turner's Tonight

Hanbury Booked To Meet Phillips In Eight-Rounder

Danny Petro, the "Waltoping Wop" from Southeast with the kick of a mule in his left hand, tonight takes on the dangerous Wayman Stewart, local Negro, in the 8-round feature scrap of Promoter Joe Turner's weekly card at Turner's Arena. It should be a repeat blood and thunder event.

Danny, who is awaiting the call from Uncle Sam, expects this to be his last fight for the duration. Wayman, with whom Danny staged a real barroom brawl a couple of months ago, is serving in this case as a substitute for Lou Transparenti of Baltimore, who hurt his hand training.

Fought a Real Brawl

Their last fight was a scorcher. First Stewart and then Danny were ready for the count. Neither used the slightest bit of boxing science but both were winding up and throwing their Sunday punches—Wayman's a roundhouse right and Danny's an equally "from the heels" left. Eventually the bout was stopped in the eighth when Stewart received a badly cut eye.

Both went to the hospital, Stewart for three days and Danny for several eye stitches.

Tonight Danny has promised to unveil a right hand against the local Negro. And Stewart, realizing that had he used a straight left against Danny would have probably won, has, likewise, been learning to stick with his left. But like the last time, if either or both get hurt, it is likely scientific endeavor will go out the window and they again will resort to the slugging tactics which made their last meeting so terrific.

LEW HANBURY

Lew Hanbury on Card

Lew Hanbury, another local featherweight who has challenged the winner of the Petro-Stewart scrap, returns to the wars after breaking his hand while training for a recent bout with Willie Pep, and will meet Jimmy Phillips, conqueror of Roy Lewis and Bernie Cady.

Hanbury's only professional defeat came at the hands of Stewart—Lew's second fight of his career—and he is more than anxious to erase that blot. Also, Lew has visions of a possible Petro bout should Danny emerge the winner, in a fight that would probably be recognized as for the featherweight championship of the District.

Two sixes and a four complete the card. Leon Kennedy tackles Lee Rosan and Willie Starr faces Billy Morris in the sixes, while Jay Irwin will oppose Hershal Todd in the curtain-raising four.—AL COSTELLO.

Breen Takes Lucky Strike 'Dub' Handicap

Rolling a remarkable second-five game block of 700, an all-time record, Francis X. Breen of St. Aloysius Booster League yesterday won the fifteenth annual Bill Wood "Dub" Handicap at Lucky Strike with a 1288 total. Breen also enjoyed an 18-pin handicap. He shot a 570 total in the afternoon block.

Breen's record-breaking string was compiled by putting together games of 154, 142, 129, 138 and 137.

Travis H. Brewer of American League, Silver Spring, last year's winner, was second with 1197, including a 12-pin handicap, 91 pins behind Breen. Harry Blumenthan of Penn Recreation was third with a 1188 total.

Carlotta Denning of Veteran's Administration League led the field of 50 women with 1135, including a 90-pin handicap. Phyllis Kimball of Rebecca Lodge was second with a total of 1094.

Christoforidis Quits; Has Plenty of Money

Cleveland, March 14 (AP).—Promoter Bob Brickman tonight announced cancellation of the 10-round fight scheduled for March 24 between Lightheavyweight Anton Christoforidis of Geneva, Ohio, and Lloyd Marshall of San Francisco.

"Christoforidis said he didn't care to fight any more and that he had plenty of money," Brickman asserted.

Norfolk Navy Five Defeats, Brewers, 50-40

The crack Norfolk Training Station quint, featuring George Washington's Matt Zunic and Gene Mako, of pro tennis fame, turned back Washington's Heurich Brewers yesterday, 50-40, in their weekly United Nations' Club game at Heurich gym yesterday. A near-capacity crowd of 900 was on hand.

Zunic tallied eight points and Mako six, but the Sailors' high scorer was Gibbs, center, who registered 17 points through the medium of six field goals and five free tosses. "Whitey" Wilson led the way for the Brewers with 13 points.

In a fast preliminary, Postoffice defeated the Marines, 48-39. Seaton for Postoffice and Moran for the Marines each tallied 20 points.

Canadiens Tie

Boston, March 14 (AP).—The Montreal Canadiens, who did all of their scoring during a blistering second period attack, prolonged their national hockey league playoff hopes by holding the late-storming Boston Bruins to a 4-4 tie tonight before a 10,000 crowd at the Boston Garden.

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

The Nats' eight-mile trek to spring training camp yesterday was very un-thrilling. The athletes assembled at Griffith Stadium in the morning, piled into cars, hit the back road to College Park, and 15 minutes later were being shown to their rooms on the University of Maryland campus.

POVICH

Clark Griffith, who likes to rib baseball writers, said "this ought to be down your alley. You lazy guys can come out to Griffith Stadium, climb a light tower, and cover our training camp by telescope."

Including the coaches and Manager Ossie Bluege, there were 13 members of the team in the party when photographers lined 'em up on the field for a picture. But Business Manager Edward B. Eynon, jr., remedied that. "Get us another man of some kind in that picture," he commanded. "We can't start off with any number like 13." From the clubhuose, Assistant Trainer Frankie Baxter was fetched to pose with the squad and take the curse off the picture.

For the first hour, Trainer Mike Martin was wandering in a daze after inspecting the layout in his trainer's quarters. They had led him to a room that contained not one, but three rubbing tables. He saw physiotherapy gadgets, countless heat appliances, snow-white appointments and a clean floor, and it was too much for Mike.

"I've heard of places like this, but I never thought we'd make it," babbled Mike. "Those ball players won't know how to behave in a room like this. It'll probably scare 'em. They used to come running to me with all kinds of imaginary ailments, but before they come in here they'll be desperate."

Somebody counted the squad and said there were ten ball players present, exclusive of coaches, but Martin differed. "Not ten ball players," he said, "nine pitchers and one catcher. Pitchers ain't ball players. Most of 'em don't know which end of a bat to use, can't run, and never have learned to bunt. All they can do is throw, and some of these probably can't throw much. Don't call pitchers ball players."

Manager Ossie Bluege found himself confronted with an immediate problem: where to get a uniform for Rookie Pitcher Richard Ahrens, a mountainous 7-foot specimen who wears size 16½ shoes. Young Mr. Ahrens was corraled in the wilds of Oil City, Pa., by the intrepid Washington scout, Joe Cambria.

"I found him in a grocery store," relates Cambria. "He was behind the counter reaching for some cans on the top shelf, and when I saw him I thought he was standing on a ladder. But I didn't see any ladder, so I signed him."

Cambria thus keeps his record intact. Each year he has delivered to the Nats' camp some kind of a phenomenon. Until this year he had been running to Cubans, Venezuelans, Mexicans and others of the Latin legion, but apparently he has worn out that territory.

"I grabbed this Ahrens when I learned that the Baltimore club was ready to sign him. Baltimore got a great recommendation on him from men who saw him pitch in semipro ranks," said Cambria. "Besides, he's a great basketball player."

The last is a fact. Ahrens was some shucks as a basketball player. He was on that famous Long Island University team that won the Madison Square Garden Tournament in 1937. Coach Claire Bee called him the best center in Long Island's history.

His basketball background will come in handy for Ahrens in the Nats' training camp. He brought his basketball shoes along with him and will work out in them until the manufacturers create a pair of baseball shoes of his size. The matter of outfitting Mr. Seven Foot in a baseball uniform is also a current problem for the manufacturers. Until they come up with something, he'll work in a sweatshirt and slacks.

Ahrens is safe from the Army. He holds some kind of a 4-Z card. The Army rejected him because he was a half-foot taller than the 6-6 limit, despite the fact that he was a noncommissioned officer in the Pennsylvania State Guard for several years. He's 25 years old.

Can the guy pitch? "I dunno," said Cambria. "His size won't hurt him, though. He had to be pretty graceful to play with the championship basketball team. When he lifts his leg and starts pitching, though, the batter is not going to have much time to make up his mind."

Earl Smith, Ex-Nat Outfielder, Dies

Portsmouth, Ohio, March 14 (AP). Earl Smith, former American League outfielder for 10 years with the Washington Nationals and the St. Louis Browns, died today.

For the last year he had been working as a plumber and pipefitter at a nearby war plant. During his baseball career, Smith also played with the Columbus and Minneapolis clubs in the American Association, managed the Beckley (W. Va.) club in the Mountain State League, and umpired in the Mid-Atlantic.

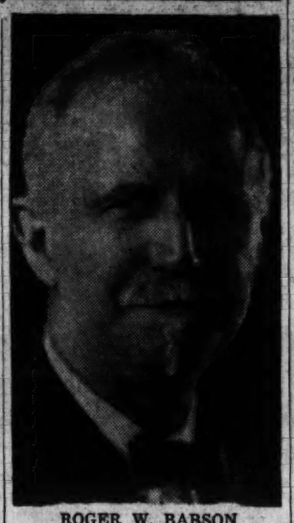
Factional Strife

By Roger W. Babson

Too Much Internal Bickering

Business volume continues at exceptionally high levels. A rising output of war materials has been fed by record productions in steel, electric power and other basic industries. High wages and increased spending power have boosted retail business.

At the same time many non-essential businesses have suffered. Fo most businessmen, regardless of their occupation, the days since Pearl Harbor have been filled with uncertainty and confusion. What the future holds for business now depends more upon leadership than upon orders.



ROGER W. BABSON

If the president an the chairman of the board of a corporation are in disagreement, they can usually through some third party be made to bury the hatchet for the good of the company. Probably if only two or three individuals were responsible for the administration of our war effort, we would be much further along the road to a solution of our business problems and to the winning of the war. But it is characteristic of a democracy such as ours that factional competition exists.

Hence, we have labor and capital, farmers and wage workers, a two-party political system, stockholders and management and a host of other competing groups at each other's throats. A serious example of factionalism at the moment is the New Dealers vs. businessmen in Washington. Another is Congress vs. Administration leaders also, of course, in Washington.

It is interesting to note, as illustrative of the change in world affairs, that we no longer hear talk of the importance of London as a business or financial center. New York City is destined to become the most important city of the world. This is one reason why I am bullish on certain New York City bank stocks and real estate.

We shall not know until the end of the war how many of our plane crashes, industrial fires, train wrecks, absentees and declines in production are due to sabotage. Thanks to Mr. Hoover and his FBI I believe such acts are being kept to a minimum. I wish all Government agencies in proportion to their size and cost were as efficiently operated as the FBI. If all bureaus produced such good results, we would have little fear for our war effort and for our economic future.

In spite of discouraging days and news I am optimistic for business. Certainly, out of the war and our domestic struggles much good will come. I would, however, be more enthusiastic over the immediate outlook if it were not for the great sabotage of effort, much of it perhaps unconscious, by some of our national groups and figures. For instance, we have Congress spending more time chasing Administration bureaucrats than in passing constructive legislation to simplify and speed up manpower, wage, tax, price and other vital matters.

Orders for certain types of war goods have been quietly cancelled for some weeks past in favor of increased production in what are now more important lines. Possibly, the placement of war orders has reached a peak. Somewhere in the armament field, limits are necessarily met in materials, men and machines. Limits in agricultural production may also be met in terms of farm implements and manpower. Hence, we have more factional disputes as to what is more important—war weapons, a still larger army, or a tin of milk and a pound butter for everyone outside of the United States of America!

The discussion of the Ruml Plan, which, incidentally, I favor, is a further example of a serious factional dispute. The lack of courage on the party of the Treasury Department, shown by their willingness to finance the war through bank borrowings, is a factional matter which, if continued, will surely bring on inflation. Washington still looks too much to the employment of bank funds instead of Government bonds which would gladly be brought by individuals if the rate were 3 per cent and if the bonds would always be accepted at par for tax payments.

If I have any one criticism to make of conditions today it is this: There is too much fighting on the home front and too little on the battle front. That alone is a good example of bad factionalism. However, we all realize that military campaigns take an enormous amount of planning and time to become effective. We have every reason to be proud of our military leaders. With faith and patience, we can leave the final battle results in their hands.

Business and labor leaders, Administration heads and Congressmen, farmers and workers, politicians and patriots, manufacturers and merchants should stop fighting. Any such who confuse issues, disrupt business, use war-time necessities for personal profit or power should be ferreted out and hamstrung for the duration. In this connection the problem of absenteeism should be impartially studied by every plant to ascertain what percentage is due to liquor. I fear it is very great. To avoid serious consequences on our home front we, everywhere, now need courageous non-partisian leadership and the self-discipline evident in our armed forces.

NOTE: The last clause in the first paragraph of last week's article should have read: "when agriculture is revolutionized" instead of "when no more fertilizers can be purchased."—R. W. B.

Orchestra Group To Conclude Its Conference Today

The Women's Committees for Symphony Orchestras will conclude their three-day biennial conference today with a business meeting at 10:30 a. m. and a large luncheon at 12:30 p. m. in the Statler Hotel.

Delegates from 17 cities and the District of Columbia will make reports and discuss all problems effecting the symphony orchestras at the morning session.

Among those to be present at the luncheon are Mrs. Henry Wallace, wife of the Vice President, Mrs. Thomas Holcomb, wife of the commandant of the Marine Corps; and Archibald MacLeish, librarian of Congress, and Dr. Hans Kindler, conductor of the National Symphony Orchestra. Mrs. Walter Bruce Howe, chairman of the local women's committee, will preside.

The delegates were luncheon guests yesterday of Mrs. Joseph E. Davies, wife of the former Ambassador to Russia, and later of the National Symphony Orchestra concert in Constitution Hall. Tonight they will be entertained at the National Gallery of Art by Gallery Director David E. Finley.

Ringside Table

With Mary Harris

PETE MACIAS,
whose fourth anniversary party at the Lounge Riviera was a carnival of fun and good wishes

ROXYETTE TO GLEN ECHO. Joan Ritter, one of the Earle Theater's cunningest Roxyettes, will become an orchestra singer on April 10 when she'll join Paul Kain's band at the opening of Glen Echo. Joan has a lovely voice and the hard-to-please Maestro Kain vows she has wonderful possibilities . . . Treasure Island, where the Kain orchestra is currently holding forth, will stage a farewell party in Paul's honor on Wednesday, March 24—though he and his band don't actually leave until the following Saturday. On Monday, March 29, Maestro Jack Neal, now at Hi Hat, will open as a solo piano and vocal artist at Treasure Island. It's a merry-go-round, isn't it? P. S.: Treasure Island also bulletins that they're going to have a greata, bigga St. Patrick's Day party.

Dick Himber's nationally-known dance band will open tonight at Del Rio. It's the second Himberian visit to Del Rio within the last few months.

YOUNG CHINA, in the persons of the dancing Sen Wongs, will star in the new Lotus floor show opening today. The Sen Wongs flourished in the international atmosphere of Hongkong's colorful cafes before the Nips became too obstreperous. Their dances combine modern ballroom steps with a mystic Celestial touch. Also in the revue are the acrobatic Maxwells, Danny Murray in a musical novelty act. The Lotus Dancettes will be doing a "Hobbyhorse Gallop."

LA MARR IS MORAND FIXTURE. Mary La Marr, one of Washington's finest little songbirds, is now permanently affiliated with José Morand's band playing in the Carlton's Cosmos Room. When the orchestra leaves Washington in a few weeks, Mary will be going along. She's very happy about it, and naturally! We heard this grand news in Restaurant "823" where Mary was dining with Maestro Morand and two of his bandsmen, Steve Pappola and Buddy Miller.

Emil Coleman and his orchestra, who have stood for the sounder melody values in "society dance music" for these many years, will open at the Hotel Statler's Embassy Room on Thursday.

OF GREATA BIGGA PARTIES. Pete Macias' fourth anniversary party at the Lounge Riviera happened to fall on the birthday of pretty Mickey Sterling. So she helped Pete to cut th cake. . . . A huge party in honor of champ golfer "Wiffy" Cox was recently tossed at the Ambassador Hotel. Among the guests who dropped into the Hi Hat later was dark-eyed Angie Rodante who used to sing there. . . . The reason you couldn't get into the Rainbow Room a couple of times recently was because of those monumental Census Bureau and telephone company soirees. . . . High ranking Army officers and their wives and sweethearts filled one side of Troika at the goodbye party given for Maj. Curtis Dall, former son-in-law of F. D. R. . . . A flock of English officers and American WAVES recently celebrated in the Dubonnet Room.

Members of the Chinese Embassy staff are among the most prized fans of the Rocco Terrone group playing at Mayfair. They always sit near the Terrone piano, request many unusual continental numbers.

SERVICE ANGLES. Teddy Powell, topflight maestro now at the Victory Room, was almost in uniform—until the medicos discovered something wrong with his sacroiliac. "And to think I never knew I had one," says Teddy. . . . Billy McIntyre, crack emcee opening with the new Casino Royal show today, will be there for only one week, then he's off to camp . . . Violinist Durward Bowersox of Burt's Trans-Lux has just received a bid for a date from the Man with the Whiskers. . . . Turk, of Jerry and Turk, opening at Paul Young's on Wednesday, has promised Paul to stay until he gets a ticket to a training camp. . . . Eddie Chase, who used to play piano in the Pall Mall Room, came visiting there recently. He's a nifty looking sailor. . . . It's a caution how men in blue gravitate to the Anchor Room. Firstly, they're attracted by the name. Then Matt Windsor's piano and Polly Parker's songs prove their hunch right. Next thing you know they're telling all the other sailors to go to the Anchor Room. . . . Bob Pace, who used to sing in the King Cole Room, is now a Marine. He tells us that the Marines are seeing the cream of the movies weeks before the general public.

Al Simmonds, the genie of the Brown Derby, is planning to bust out the walls or something. He's gotta have more room! One definite decision is that the Brown Derby is going to have a new dance floor in back. Don't ask us what's going to happen to the kitchen.

SWEETER'N SUGAR. "Stick to Your Knittin', Kitten," new tune being done by El Patio's Little Jack Little . . . "Love's Old Sweet Song" as sung soft 'n low by Lyn Turner of the Old New Orleans . . . "Mammy's Lullaby," newest brain child of Godfrey Straub, pianist of the Neptune Room . . . The gay bird call number often played by violinist Venesko of the Balalaika.

Morgan's Body to Be Cremated

By the Associated Press

New York, March 14 — With the same privacy in which he sought to live, John Pierpont Morgan, head of a fabulous financial organization, will be laid to rest Tuesday morning.

There will be no flowers, nor will friends and associates be permitted to view the body. The family spokesman, however, said the services will be conducted in St. George's Protestant Episcopal Church at Stuyvesant Square by the Rev. Rush R. Sloane, rector of St. John's Church of Lattingtown, Locust Valley, Long Island. Morgan was senior warden and a regular attendant at St. John's in recent years while living at his Matinecock estate near Glen Cove.

The banker died yesterday in his vacation cottage at Boca Grande, Fla. He was 75. His father, J. Pierpont Morgan, also was 75 when he died in Rome on March 31, 1913.

The body is scheduled to arrive in New York in a private railroad car tomorrow morning. Morgan's younger son, Lieut. Comdr. Henry Sturgis Morgan, and his younger daughter, Mrs. Paul G. Pennoyer, will accompany it to New York, and it will be taken to the Morgan Library at 29 East Thirty-sixth Street.

After the funeral the body will be taken to the Fresh Pond Crematory at Middle Village, Queens, and the ashes will be taken to Hartford, Conn., where his wife and others of the Morgan family are buried.

The financier had made annual trips to Hartford since the death of his wife, Jane Norton Grew Morgan, in 1925.

Services Mark Anniversary of Austria's Fall

Punishment of the guilty for "the rape of Austria" was demanded by the Very Rev. Ignatius Smith, O. P., yesterday at one of the two services marking the fifth anniversary of Austria's fall.

Msgr. Smith, dean of Catholic University's school of philosophy, preached at solemn high mass in the National Shrine of the Immaculate Conception before 100 worshipers, including Archduke Otto and other diplomatic, legislative and religious figures, as well as several Austrian members of the university faculty.

The archduke, who sat beside the Right Rev. Patrick J. McCormick, acting university vice rector, was accompanied by his aide, Count Edmund Czernin, and Walter von Schuschnigg, first cousin of Austria's last chancellor, Kurt von Schuschnigg, who was arrested by the Gestapo in March, 1938, and is said to be interned near Berlin.

Declaring justice demanded that Austria's woes be remembered, Msgr. Smith said that "this does not mean that Christian love and mercy are to be abandoned and that barbaric hatred is to be the cornerstone of a new day, but it does mean that Christian justice in all its phases must prevail.

"Such justice demands that outrages against the natural and divine law must be punished," he continued, "both because the balance of justice must be restored and also because retribution and punishment will serve to prevent the repetition of such outrages in the future.

"The innocent must be spared, but the guilty must be punished by the requirements of that special virtue which is called vindictive justice," he said.

"It must be remembered that such partial Christians and pagans have attempted to take out of God's religion the concept of divine and eternal punishment; they have eliminated the discipline of punishment from the home and the school; they have crippled political society in the administration of justice by turning penitentiaries into country clubs; they would turn international society into a barbaric jungle by permitting international crime to go unpunished."

The Rev. Thomas Michels, O. S. B., formerly dean of the University of Salzburg, celebrated the mass, at which the Sulpician Choir sang.

The Archduke and fellow-Austrians went last night to another memorial service at Ezras Israel Synagogue, Eighth and I Streets Northwest.

Bringing greetings at the Jewish service, the Archduke said that the fact that both Jews and Catholics are uttering prayers for early Allied victory and for liberation of Austria is symbolic of the common fight of all God-made religions against the Nazi "man-made religion of paganism."

But No Karloffs

Keesler Field, Miss.—It took Hollywood, with all its glamour and extravaganza, several years to "discover" such names as Lana Turner, Hedy Lamar, Ronald Colman and Robert Taylor. Keesler Field's bomber school turned up a Charlie Chaplin, Joe E. Brown, Charlie McCarthy, Bob Burns, two Ronald Colmans, three Robert Taylors, three William Powells and many Charles Boyers.

Button, Button . . .

Philadelphia.—Mrs. Ruth Clark, hostess and visitors' escort at the Frankford Arsenal, equipped an inspection party with identification buttons and walked a half mile to one of the buildings they wanted to inspect.

Then she couldn't get in—she had forgotten her own button.

The Federal Diary

By Jerry Kluttz

Manpower Inquiry Avoids Personalities

The Byrnes supercommittee report on manpower won't deal in personalities, which means that Paul McNutt won't be removed as manpower czar, right away at least. However, several committee members wanted McNutt replaced, but they couldn't get an outstanding man to agree to accept the job. The committee, it's reported, will recommend that a tell-'em-where-to-work law (national service legislation) is needed and will eventually have to be enacted as the manpower squeeze gets tighter, but for political reasons it doesn't believe now is the time to get congressional approval.

KLUTTZ

A job that's going begging is the chairmanship of the Government's Fair Employment Practices Committee. War Labor Board Member Frank Graham was offered the job, but he refused to leave WLB . . . Commerce Department is considering the appointment of a new assistant secretary to be in charge of small business problems. Meantime, WPB's Smaller War Plants Corporation is bogged down because of lack of trained personnel. Many faces will change soon at SWPC . . . General Phillip Fleming, administrator of Federal Works, is reported to be under consideration for a top-flight Army assignment. He's on loan from the Army.

SENATE CIVIL SERVICE COMMITTEE: Today your committee will consider a wartime pay bill for Federal employes and I'd like to call your attention to a possible amendment. Do you realize that Vice Chairmen Charles Wilson and Ralph Cordiner of War Production Board are paid only $8000 a year? Under the new WPB regime, these men just about run the organization but still people under them draw larger salaries. That's not equal pay for equal work. Now, neither Wilson nor Cordiner need the money. It's just the principle of the Government salary scale. Both men drew around the $100,000 figure in industry and they probably could have continued to draw their huge private salaries if they had wanted to be dollar-a-year appointees. Many Congressmen don't like the dollar-a-year system, but it can't be junked so long as $8000 is the top the Government can pay. Don't you believe an adjustment is necessary?

War Department may publish a weekly newspaper for its civilian employes . . . War Transfer Unit appears to be shaking itself out of the doldrums. Last week more than 1600 employes were transferred, about 800 of them here. That is a record . . . The President this week will send to the Senate the nominations of Hugh Cox to be Assistant Attorney General in charge of the war unit, and Tom Clark to be chief of Justice's antitrust unit. Clark will continue as chief of the war frauds unit . . . It's now a distinct possibility that the air-cooling apparatus will be left in the new Social Security Building. Much of the illness of WPB employes has been traced to bad air and congestion since air-cooling has been turned off. The building was constructed to be air-conditioned and there is no way to air it out. It's bad enough now, but during the summer it would be just about impossible.

That joint Budget Bureau-Procurement survey has turned up 14,525 surplus typewriters in Government that have or will be turned over to expanding agencies. Procurement already has transferred 9124 and 3500 others are being sent to the armed forces. Internal Revenue, for example, needs 1600 and Treasury has rounded up about half that number. Agriculture turned in 841; National Youth Administration, 601; Interior, 467; Social Security, 247; and TVA, 274. Federal Trade and Tariff Commission handed over 32 and 24 per cent respectively of all their machines. Typewriters haven't been manufactured in some months and as the Government continues to expand more machines will be taken from the old-line agencies.

Those OPA and WPB personnel "freeze" orders don't mean that all promotions are stopped. Incidentally, of the 2400 persons who have negotiated with WPB for jobs, only about 200 will be accepted. These 200 were actually told to report. The remaining 2200 had better look elsewhere for jobs. . . . At the Naval Powder Factory at nearby Indian Head, the per diem employes report they are forced to lose time on Saturday equal to time lost during the week. This screwball ruling deprives the employes of overtime pay no matter what the reason may be for being out during a weekday. Of course, that adds to absenteeism. The Lyndon Johnson subcommittee that's investigating naval personnel will want to look into it. The House subcommittee also is looking into reports of questionable rules and regulations at the Alexandria torpedo factory that rile the employes.

Can it possibly be true that the new high command at WPB has made a deal to transfer the important progress report unit to the Army? . . . Charles Taft, McNutt aide, was raked over the coals for telling a Senate committee that all 3-A's would be inducted into the Army this summer . . . Civil Service wants business and industry analysists with experience in food, textiles, metals, consumer goods, and equipment.

Fine Lenten Sunday Fills Churches

D. C. Worshipers Throng to Attend Special Services Of Holy Season

By Robert Tate Allan
Post Church Editor

Services commemorating the first Sunday in Lent drew throngs of worshippers yesterday.

Enduring international affections must be spiritually based, Dr. Paul F. Douglass, American University president, said at Rhode Island Avenue Methodist Church, First and Rhode Island Avenue.

DOUGLASS

"All America has become a secular missionary," declared Dr. Douglass, "as we seek to extend what we call the four freedoms to the planetary limits." The occasion was the annual missionary night celebration of the Woman's Society of Christian Service, of which Mrs. John T. Schrott is president.

Dr. Douglass said:

"The new global secular mission movement which takes material blessings like cannon, food and medical supplies, with staff men representing cultural relations, war information, economic and psychological warfare and other interests, for the moment succeeds the spiritual missionary movement which gave us families like the Pearl Bucks, the Soongs, the Luces, the Guilks and others who grew on mission fields because their parents were global in their sympathies and consecrated to the service of the world.

"Their parents gave themselves," he said, "and they did not expect to buy friendship by lend-lease or to pay for it by compulsory income taxes. International affections which endure are spiritual, and the church now has the greatest responsibility in its history."

Dr. Douglass was presented by Dr. Edgar A. Sexsmith, pastor.

Park View Church

In another Lenten sermon the Rev. George M. Anderson said that some of the "marks of the beast of Biblical prophecy" are the abolition of personal liberty, free speech, freedom of the press and the right of assembly. He spoke at Park View Christian Church, 627 Park Road Northwest, on "A Bomb for the World's Final Dictator," fourth in a sermon series on the general theme of "Bombs From Heaven."

Cathedral Series

A series of special Lenten Sunday evening services began last night at the Washington Cathedral, with congregational singing led by the Cathedral Choral Society. The Rev. Charles W. F. Smith, Cathedral Canon chancellor, preached.

Of particular Catholic interest was the launching of a Lenten mission last evening at St. Matthew's Cathedral, under the direction of the Vincentian Fathers. Last night's services were for women. March 21 services will be for men. Catholics and non-Catholics are invited.

DARBY

A number of special daily and weekly Lenten services are planned for the coming week of neighborhood, individual and city-wide nature.

The Very Rev. Austin F. Pardue, dean of the St. Paul' Cathedral, Buffalo, N. Y., speaks today through Friday, at 12 noon, at Lenten rites in Epiphany Episcopal Church,

Infant Aunt and Baby Nephew Baptized in Same Ceremony

An aunt and her nephew were carried to the baptismal font of Mount Vernon Place Methodist Church, Ninth Street and Massachusetts Avenue Northwest, yesterday. Both were infants.

One was Frances Eva Amick, 4-month-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Amick, and the other was William Dreos, jr., 2-month-old son of Mr. and Mrs. William Dreos, sr., all of 4104 Thirty-second Street, Mount Rainier, Md.

Dreos is a Pennsylvania Railroad conductor. Amick is connected with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, is former president of the A. B. Pugh Men's Bible Class at Mount Vernon Place Methodist Church.

Dr. John W. Rustin, Mount Vernon Place pastor, officiated at the baptisms.

Detention Home Takes Steps To Prevent Further Escapes

Superintendent Anthony B. Caffrey of the District House of Detention for Children reported yesterday that he had taken immediate steps to prevent further escapes from the institution, following the departure Saturday of eight boys who broke through wire mesh covering a third-story window and walked to freedom down a fire escape.

Meanwhile, two of the boys, one of whom is being held in the traffic death of Andrew Thompson, 17, 1312 Randolph Street Northeast, were returned to the house. Another boy being held in the death, who has been recovering from injuries suffered in the accident, was released to the home yesterday from Casualty Hospital.

"The boys escaped because we allowed them to dress before washing," Caffrey said. "While the attendant was watching the other dormitory or the washroom, the boys forced the window. Under the system I've since installed, the boys wash first and then dress in the front recreation room from which there is no fire escape accessible," he said.

The institution, at 816 Potomac Avenue Southeast, is a four-story building, built originally as an apartment house.

"The building may have been all right as an apartment house, but it is unsuitable for this type of home," Caffery said yesterday, because the floors are broken up into small rooms. This arrangement makes it impossible to see all rooms from any one vantage point."

Caffrey said that he had knocked out several partitions which has resulted in two medium-size dormitories. "But we can't remove all of the room partitions because many of them bear the weight of upper floors."

He said that many of the difficulties could be eliminated if he had a larger staff. "But," he commented, "just like everyone else these days I have trouble in finding suitable men for the jobs."

Caffrey, a big, sandy-haired fellow with bright blue eyes, takes a sincere interest in his charges and gives the impression, as many athletic coaches do, that he belongs working with youths. He was graduated from Marquette University, and has supplemented this with social science study at Catholic University. He has been in his present position since December 7; before that he was superintendent of intake at Juvenile Court.

"What I need is steel strips to reinforce the wire mesh on my windows," he said. "I've called the D. C. Repair Shop but they are unable to get the metal. Metal shortages are also largely responsible for my not having steel framed windows."

Canvassers For Red Cross Report Today

Reports from the residential and city divisions of Washington and representatives of Montgomery, Prince Georges, Arlington and Fairfax Counties, to be made at 12:30 p. m. today in the United States Chamber of Commerce Building, 1615 H Street Northwest, will open another week of the Red Cross campaign here for $1,555,400.

Since residential and city workers are expected to account for funds usually received through solicitation booths, of which none are operating this year, their house-to-house collection report is awaited with great anticipation.

The last report of total collections was made on Friday, when $512,493 had been received.

Collection reports will be made tomorrow by the Government and generals business units which have played a conspicuous part in the campaign's early success.

Other report luncheons will be held daily through Friday.

Dr. Briggs Resigns as Pastor Of the Fifth Baptist Church

Dr. John E. Briggs, for 34 years pastor of historic Fifth Baptist Church in Southwest Washington, and nationally known Baptist leader, yesterday announced to his congregation that he would retire from the active ministry May 1. He is 70.

DR. BRIGGS

The clerk told The Post after the services that he had no immediate plans for the future, and, after a trip to Florida, would resume his residence here.

Long one of the city's outstanding ministers, Dr. Briggs has been especially prominent in local and nearby Baptist mission work, being the driving spirit behind the organization of a number of churches and Sunday schools of his denomination, including the Wilson Boulevard Baptist Church, Colmar Manor, Md.; Boulevard Heights, Md., and others.

Since coming to Fifth Church in 1909, the clergyman has welcomed more than 5000 people into membership, including 2552 by baptism; has seen his church enrollment jump to more than 1400 and helped his congregation to raise $700,000 for all purposes. In an interview three years ago, he estimated that he had made more than 30,000 pastoral calls in his 42-year ministerial career. He has officiated at several thousand baptisms and funerals.

When he returned to his pulpit in July 21, 1940, after a trying illness, Dr. Briggs said he was "the most thankful man in Washington" for having regained his health, and praised both earthly and Divine physicians at a special service.

On June 1, 1940, the congregation—to help ease the burden of Dr. Briggs' work, called a junior pastor and minister of music, the Rev. J. Herrick Hall of New Orleans.

G. U. Medical Graduates Hear Leahy

District Draft Chief Stresses Need for Will to Win War; 69 Get Diplomas

Americans are in this war to win it, to preserve their way of life, William E. Leahy, District chairman of Selective Service told a graduating class of the Georgetown University School of Medicine yesterday.

"No matter what economic modifications of the former order of our civic philosophy may be necessary or regimentation of our conduct may be required, Americans now are of one mind that we must win this war," he said.

"There is a general realization that if we do not win, we lose everything," Leahy continued. "There is an utter uselessness in sending our boys to fight and suffer and die unless there exists the assurance that when they return victorious they will return to the same homeland they left, the same liberties, the same freedom, the same individual right in the American way of living which each left to defend and for the preservation of which so many have already died."

Father Gorman Awards Degrees

The Very Rev. Lawrence C. Gorman, S. J., president of the university, who awarded degrees to a class of 69 medical seniors, said that before the summer was over, most of the student body would be in the Army of the United States and replaced by soldier-students.

The commencement was the ninety-second for the school and earlier in the day, the Very Rev. William J. Murphy, S. Eighteen of the graduates were awarded commissions as first lieutenants in the Army Medical Reserve Corps by Lieut. Col. James E. Phillips, M. C., professor of military science and tactics. Most of the other graduates will soon take up medical careers in the Army, Navy and Marine Corps.

Wounded Pilot Tells of Bailing Out of Plane Into Wilds

Craft Exploded As U. S. Airman 'Chuted to Safety

Associated Press WIREPHOTO

LIEUT. JAS. J. SOUTHERLAND

"They shot the goggles off my forehead, my mirror was shattered, all the ammunition box covers and part of the upper surface of my left wing had disappeared, the oil tank was punctured, flaps and radio were gone. Finally they exploded good old 4F-12; I was ready and immediately dove over the starboard side head first."

All this, and more, including 11 wounds was endured by a former Washingtonian who tangled with 27 Japanese two-engine bombers and four Zero fighters during the early stages of the Solomons campaign and then lived to tell about it after bailing out of his disabled Grumman Wildcat fighter while the craft was only 400 feet in the air.

The flier was Lieut. James Julien (Pug) Southerland, U. S. N., 31, whose exploits, as related in a letter to his commanding officer, were announced yesterday by the Navy Department. Lieutenant Southerland is the son-in-law of Capt. R. S. Crenshaw, U. S. N., who formerly resided at 3703 Northampton Street Northwest, the same address which the Navy Department supplied for the flier. Inasmuch as the Crenshaws moved away from that address more than two years ago, details of the lieutenant's local connections were not immediately available. His mother, Mrs. Leonidas Beally Southerland, resides in Richmond, Va.

A member of Navy's Fighting Squadron Five, which destroyed 77 enemy aircraft during its operations in the Solomons, Lieutenant Southerland's almost incredible experience is best told in the words of his own letter. After relating how he dived over the side of his ship, he wrote:

"My .45 held me up for a second, but I got rid of it somehow and was out. The plane did a right chandelle and dove straight down in flames, missing me by about 20 feet. Up to that time I had been 'cruising' at full throttle. The Pratt & Whitney engine hadn't even sputtered.

"I don't believe I was more than 400 feet up when I got out so I pulled the ripcord immediately. The ring came out with so little resistance I thought the release line has been shot. I started clawing frantically up the webbing to release the chute when the thing suddenly filled and I was floating. I landed in some trees without much shock.

"Here I sat down to take stock of the situation," the letter continued. "I had a bad hole in my right foot, three shrapnel holes in the calf of my right leg, one in my left knee, one in my left thigh, three in the upper part of my left arm, one glancing cut over my eye, and a small piece of shrapnel in my scalp. I was quite surprised to find myself alive and the damage done seemed insignificant.

"I worked my way to the beach through the jungle where I spent that afternoon, night, and part of the next day waiting in the hope I might be spotted and picked up. Bathed all wounds in salt water. Tore my underclothing into bandages and made a compress to stop bleeding in the right foot. Spent all day working toward —— slowly. Avoided two Jap lookouts. Subsisted on cocoanuts, wild oranges and plenty of fresh water. Borrowed a native canoe from a deserted native village but it sunk on me.

9 Persons Injured in Day's Series of 3 Traffic Accidents

Five persons, three of them servicemen, were injured in a spectacular collison between two taxicabs and a truck early yesterday and four persons were hurt in other traffic mishaps.

The three-way crash occurred in the 2300 block Bladensburg Road Northeast, when one cab struck a truck which was stuck in the mud, and then careened head-on into another taxi. Both cabs were demolished.

Seriously hurt was Lawrence E. Taylor, 30, 410 Fifteenth Street Northeast, driver of one cab. He suffered a possible fractured skull, broken ribs and cuts. Driver of the other cab, Dallas Hursh, 48, of 1755 P Street Northwest, received a broken right arm and lacerations.

Lieut. Guy Boothby, 33, U. S. M. C., at Quantico, Va., and Pvts. Paul Kawalchyk, 30, of Waterlick, N. Y., and Yeoman Third Class Earl W. Clarke, 30, of Arlington, Va., all suffered head injuries and bruises. The injured were treated at Casualty Hospital.

Mrs. Mary Berned, 50, of 2028 Higdon Road Northeast, was knocked down by an automobile at Bladensburg Road and South Dakota Avenue Northeast, and sustained possible fractures to both knees and a bruised hip. She was admitted to Casualty Hospital.

Three men were given first aid at Casualty Hospital following a 2-car accident on Eleventh Street Southeast near the Anacostia Bridge. They were identified as Andrew M. Fyfe, 29, of Arlington, Va., driver of one car, Benjamin W. Hess, 43, of Vienna, Va., operator of the other, and a passenger in the latter's machine, Joseph W. Connotie, 27, a sailor at the U. S. Navy Yard.

High Prices For Farms Boom Sales

Auctioneer Sees Profits Luring Owners in Best Market Ever

By Linton Burkett
Post Staff Writer

While labor shortages and ceiling prices undoubtedly influence veteran farmers to sell out, reports from auctioneers would indicate that war unrest and the prospect of quick profits actuate those quitting the soil.

One of the auctioneers, John Null, of Frederick, who has sold an average of a farm a day during the month of March and who is booked to continue at that rate through April 6, pointed out that farms, machinery and livestock are bringing the highest prices in history, and are being sold for cash.

"I do not believe that the men selling out are doing so because they cannot make money farming," he said. "Not one farm that I have sold has been taken out of production. Not one piece of machinery has remained idle. The livestock continues to be used.

"For that reason, I am convinced that we will have to look further for the motives.

Sales Set Record

"During the first World War sales did not equal those of the past year, when sales were 15 per cent higher than any previous year. During the other war, farms were sold on a six months' credit plan. Now they are sold for cash.

"This year farms, used machinery and livestock are bringing the highest prices ever known. Now if the original owner is forced to sell out because he is losing money on the farm, why should another man pay a record price and immediately settle down to operating the place?

"It is true that some farms have been sold because the owner was attracted by the higher wages he could earn in a war industry or in the city."

But the auctioneer indicated in most instances the farmer selling out made a neat profit on the deal. He then could take advantage of the high wages offered in industry, come back to the soil after the war, and be able to resume his original profession by buying farm and machinery on a dull market.

Farm Relief Program

Null did say, however, that farmers are faced with a serious manpower problem.

Edward A. O'Neal, president of the American Farm Bureau Federation, announced he had placed before the House Appropriations Committee a 15-point program for easing the lot of the farmer, which, if adopted, would result in classifying farming as a war industry, with all the preferments given to such industry.

High in his lists of "musts" was the demand that farm labor be deferred in the draft. Another must, he said, was to add increased labor costs to parity.

Other requisites were:

Adjustments in accordance with existing acts of Congress of price ceilings and price supports to such levels as will encourage and enable farmers to achieve maximum production.

Eliminating all subsidies used to keep prices from rising in the market place to parity or a price necessary to get needed production.

Additional legislation to require that administrative officials fix price ceilings in accordance with the plain intent of existing acts of Congress.

Contnuation of commodity loans and price supports at 90 per cent of parity or at higher levels if necessary to get needed production.

Continuation of commodity loans plified, decentralized, economical administration, greater farmer control, and with activities of employes and committeemen confined strictly to administration.

Lengthening industrial work week and eliminating premium pay in order to spread workers and increase labor supply for factories and farms.

Transfering needed functions of Farm Security Administration to appropriate existing State and Federal agencies.

Centering farm labor responsibility in Extension Service, with authority to contract with United States Employment Service to recruit and transport workers, and eliminating labor-union standards as conditions of supplying farm labor.

Providing adequate farm, machinery, fertilizer, protein feeds, and other essential supplies.

Release of surplus grains for feeding, but not below a price that would reduce the price of a competing feed grain below parity.

Adequate farm and market transportation for farmers.

Simplifying and minimizing Government regulations and eliminating red tape and unnecessary questionnaires that confuse farmers and consume their time.

Common sense in rationing.

His program could be carried out with substantial reductions in present appropriations to farmers by the Federal Government, he told the committee. He asserted that adoption of his plan would provide the stimulus needed to produce all the food now needed.

U. S. DESIGNED

By Jeanne Contini

Once in a great long while, into the life of a fashion editor will come a dress that justifies and brings back all the luster to all the enthusiastic words in her vocabulary. Last autumn, with the launching of L-85, we began to talk about American design with more rosy hopes than tangibles. The frozen silhouette, the saving of yardage, was liable to produce anything from gingerbread-laden sarongs to sausage-skin chemises. What happened was something that swung wildly between a sequined draped shape and the naked truth. Out of the first unsteady gropings began to come some of the best designs America has ever seen. It graduated from a prodigality of gadgets to a true evaluation of line. It has now matured.

What can be done with a limited cut of fabric and not even one fancy button is demonstrated in the dress we have sketched today, a coat dress. As simple to put on as an apron (a couple of hooks and a tie), it has the timeless beauty of an Egyptian mural. With any fine composition, there is a center from which all the important lines radiate—in this case, the waistline. Every fold is planned, yet the whole gives the effect of spontaneity.

All of Miss Viln's dresses have the same graciousness. She designs for the woman of taste whose age is somewhere between 30 and 45 and whose dress size is anything from 16 to 20. The waistline is cut somewhat lower than usual with a slight dip in the back—this achieves an extraordinarily graceful hipline with a slim skirt. As a group these dresses were not spectacular, but as we looked at them, one by one, all the words like fine, sculptural, quality, distinguished, etc., took on new life. Miss Viln works quietly in a small studio in California. She was "discovered" by a few discerning people, and for the first time her clothes may be seen in Washington at one of the local stores.

You owe it to yourself to see the collection at least for the satisfaction you can derive from any veritable work of art. And try them on—they were built for the body and not for hanger display.

When Distribution of Fat on Body Is Irregular

By Logan Clendening, M. D.

Obesity is considered to be an accumulation of fat evenly distributed over the body. This is a purely theoretical definition because in nearly any obesity there is a tendency for fat to accumulate in certain places. "Middleaged spread" refers to a distribution of fat which is concentrated between the collar bones and the knee and this is the ordinary form of obesity.

There are, however, rather special cases of accumulation of fat. One is the fat pad on the neck which forms a sort of horse collar and may leave the rest of the body fairly thin. Another is a form which occurs mostly in women in which the body from the waist down is extremely heavy with many fat pads and the upper part of the body is almost emaciated.

A peculiarity of some fat accumulations is that they are very painful. This is the disease called adiposus dolorosa, which is an accumulation of fat pads on the under part of the arms and is so named because it means a fat accumulation that is painful. It occurs in women at about the time of the change of life and the pain turns the patient into a nervous invalid. It is extremely resistant to treatment.

The commonest form of localized accumulation of fat is what is called lipoma, which means a tumor of the fat tissue. These are very common and can be found as little balls of fat about the size of half a lemon, or larger. They seem to have no relation to the general nutrition of the body at all. People with these fat pads may become completely emaciated from a fever or other systemic disease and yet the fat in these accumulations does not go down at all.

Still another condition is called symmetrical multiple encapsulated fat pads. In this condition there will be numerous small nodules of fat which can be felt under the skin. They are called symmetrical because, for instance, there will be exactly ten on one arm and ten on the other arm.

The cause of the various abnormal conditions is entirely unknown. Probably they have something to do with the ductless glands.

There is, however, unquestionably an endocrine basis to fat accumulations as can be seen in such cases as those of young adolescents who are overweight—such as the Fat Boy in "Pickwick." There must be one in your neighborhood.

Imitation Marriage

By MICHAEL STORM

The story thus far: Scott Hayden runs into adventure in the small East Coast town where he is spending his vacation when he encounters a girl running through the dimmed-out streets pursued by two men. He tries to tell himself the affair is none of his business, but he follows them anyway and when the men finally corner the girl and begin to manhandle her, Scott wades in. The girl gets away and then the men, obviously skilled in the street-fighting technique, threw themselves upon Scott. He is on the ground being brutally beaten when a policeman's whistle sounds and the two thugs flee. When the officer arrives, Scott asks him if he saw the girl and, not having seen her, he is openly skeptical of Scott's sobriety.

CHAPTER V

Scott came alert quickly. "You didn't see her? She was here just a minute ago. I told her to get up the street. Which way did you come?"

"Right from that direction." The policeman waved his hand toward the top of the street. "You'd better do some fast explaining or you'll be holding down a nice, comfortable cell. What's the idea, brawling here in the street? Are you off a boat?"

The policeman looked at Scott more closely. "Oh, you're a city visitor."

"That's right."

"And I suppose you've been drinking and got into an argument?"

Scott said: "I suppose you could call it an argument even though I didn't speak any words. It was just a matter of swinging fists."

The big policeman smiled. "What about this here lady now. You know her?"

"Haven't had the pleasure. But I told her to run to the top of this street—under that light there. Didn't you hear anyone yell?"

"I heard a call for help, but I didn't see who it was." The policeman's big bulk shifted as he swung around and peered up the street. He seemed a little put out. "Kind of funny, that."

Scott murmured half to himself. "Grateful honey, isn't she?" His voice held a flat and disillusioned tone that did not go unnoticed.

The police fixed understanding eyes on Scott's lean face. He took Scott by the arm. "Look, buddy," he said quietly, "I believe you—I don't know why—but it ain't goin' to do either of us any good standin' here. Besides," his voice went abruptly gruff as though he realized what he had been saying, "I got better things to do than listen to stories." He pushed Scott gently. "Now go home and sleep it off. You'll be better in the morning. The only thing that makes me feel charitable toward you is that you're a dope takin' on two at a time." He paused again and continued gazing thoughtfully at Scott Hayden. And then he added measuringly, "But you're big enough to do it."

Scot said: "I got the boot."

"I saw that."

Scott laughed grimly. "I'd like to meet those two gentlemen again. Perhaps I will. This is a small town."

The policeman snorted. "If I catch you it will be the square cell."

Scott looked at the policeman and he knew that it would be useless to attempt an explanation. He couldn't exactly interpret his convictions to himself.

The number on the policeman's hat was 32, and Scott fixed that in his memory. He might need help sometime, because right now he realized that this episode was not finished. He could not trace this pattern within himself, but it was there.

Those two men had not been fooling. Whatever the girl had, or possibly knew, was important to them. They had not been ordinary street thugs. They had attempted to subdue the girl—possibly kill her. There had been that deadly intent evident in their actions when Scott had burst upon them.

Scott said, "I'll be getting along. Thanks for saving me from a beating." He turned away and started up the street. The strength was back in his legs now and he strode along more hurriedly. The girl might be at the top of the hill. Scott hopsd that she would. He angled for the corner and before he was completely around he looked back at the policeman and waved his arm. The man had been considerate, Scott thought. Perhaps there were many such brawls in the streets. This was a fishing town and the men were on shore only rarely.

The main street was almost completely deserted—of both automobiles and people. Scott glanced around carefully. He was aware that even now he might encounter the two thugs. They could have circled the block. Scott moved along slowly to where he had parked his automobile. He came upon every alley way warily; he noted carefully the shape of every approaching figure.

Yielding to Sales Talk on Patriotism, Western Man Gave Up Established Business to Take War Job In Washington, Where Horse Sense Is a Liability

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I have a morale problem on my hands, namely, my husband. A year ago we left a happy and satisfactory life in the southwest to come to Washington. My husband was well established, busy and happy in his work, and we felt at home in our community. However, the officials of the Government agency in which he now works were insistent on his coming to Washington. They said, in effect, that he would be a "slacker" to stay where he was, when he had so much to contribute to winning the war. They gave him a big sales talk about the Government job and deprecated the work he was doing at home. After a month of discussion between us, we decided the patriotic thing to do was to forsake the happy and satisfactory life we had, in order that my husband could be of most help to his country.

During our first six months in Washington, my husband felt he was really doing things of importance. When we arrived, our country had been at war only a few months, and his agency was meeting and disposing of problems in a manner which was advancing the national cause. But gradually, after the first six months, disillusion began to set in. It is relevant to say that my husband always has been very objective in his attitude toward himself, the world and his work. So much so, in fact, that he sometimes puts people off by his frank, honest and unbiased evaluation and analysis of situations. During those first desperate months in Washington, the people with whom he was working welcomed this trait of his. But as his agency became more firmly organized and entrenched, this trait,—formerly regarded by his associates as an asset.—became a liability.

We have had long talks about his present situation and I have enough confidence in his honesty and integrity to know that he is incapable of fooling himself or distorting what he sees. He says that all of the "bounce" and flexibility has gone out of his agency; that the agency officials have become incapable of making forthright decisions; that they are more interested in maintaining the agency's "vested interests" in the political scheme than they are in promoting a speedy victory for the Allies; and that even when they do make decisions, those decisions are so much the result of compromise, opportunism and interdivision jealously that the net effect is muddied and nullified. He says when he came to Washington, a man's best asset was intelligence and competence. But that now, he would give away a pound of intelligence for an ounce of integrity and character, if he were choosing men to replace those in charge of his agency. He says "smartness" seems to be the order of the day; and that men who previously could make clear-cut and effective decisions apparently have had this capacity numbed and rendered impotent by intra- and inter-agency competition for power.

Officials Cling to Him But Mangle His Product

My husband is frankly disgusted and dissatisfied and has lost a great deal of faith and confidence in his fellow workers and in the Government. He is inclined to feel that his usefulness is over; and he wants to get into something that will give him a sense of significance, instead of sterility. But the officials of his agency say he cannot leave now; that he would be "running out on them;" that his year of training and familiarity with the program should not be lost to the agency; that the difficulty of obtaining staff in general and replacing him in particular would result in a disservice to the war effort, if he should leave. But every time he recommends some straightforward action, the recommendation is "cleared" with so many individuals and is so compromised and diluted that it ends up hardly recognizable. Thus, he cannot reconcile agency statements of his "importance" with agency treatment of his recommendations.

I wonder if his situation is unique? And, in any case, what I can or should do? Should I attempt to bolster his morale in his present situation? Or encourage him to get out? I am sure that he, at least, has not lost the power to make decisions; and he will make one shortly. But I wonder which way I should throw my influence?—in the direction of staying here, and seeing my husband's effectiveness smothered by the vast amount of muddled leadership? Or in the direction of getting out and into some work where he will be significant and have a sense of putting all his energies into the winning of the war—whether that be in the armed services (where he wants to be) or in industrial defense work? O. T. F.

Why Bury Himself Alive, When He's Free to Quit?

DEAR O. T. F.: If your intellectually honest and outstandingly able husband must concede the fact that his hardest-hitting best efforts to advance the Allied cause consistently meet with so much picayune interference on the agency "front" that they fizzle out in process of "clearance," instead of scoring a bull's-eye or any approximation thereof, then it seems to me he has a duty to conscience and country to—as a man might say—get the hell out of this particular politics-playing outfit without further ado and launch his contribution through some other channel.

Not only is he NOT accomplishing anything in the present situation, but he is actually losing ground, for himself and his country—in such ways as (1) wasting his time, which should and easily could be devoted to positive service; and (2) in progressively impairing his fitness to serve, by submitting himself to a demoralizing situation which engenders loss of faith and confidence in his Government and insidiously dulls to indifference his whole approach to the field of critical problems he is qualified to tackle constructively; and (3) in tacitly lending his influential indorsement to an arrangement which involves "labor hoarding"—with himself among the "hoarded"—when the entire country is beginning to groan under the need of more responsible and productive utilization of manpower, or, as in his case, "brain power."

Talent Gathers Dust In Agency Pigeonholes

As to whether his frustrating experience is unique. I daresay not. Since war broke, an enormous amount of administrative talent has been summoned to Washington, very much of which has since been gathering dust in pigeonhole assignments, waiting possible future reference—or so runs the worried complaint of many of the pigeonhole occupants, both men and women. As between trying to bolster your husband's morale in the present situation and encouraging him to get out—I should favor persuading him to pull out, if it is indeed true that he is being casually straitjacketed into a cipher role of fuming ineffectually, by personal-advantage-seeking agency officials, after having shelved his own lucrative business for the duration, due to their urgent insistence that he "serve his country" under their leadership. But I rather imagine he will reach this decision of his own accord—sooner or later. And it will be the more final and satisfactory to him, if independently arrived at, provided it has your complete approval. Which suggests that the best way to bolster his morale in the interim is to give him the benefit of a steady display of absolute confidence in his judgment and powers of decision, while incidentally supporting his mounting revolt against the present stalemate. M. H.

Miss Haworth will be plad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Mend It!

Mending assumes greater importance in wartime when goods are scarce and taxes loom. The sewing machine and the new "iron on" mending tapes speed up the job enormously. Having mending materials well organized and convenient to pick up at odd times helps you to fit mending into a crowded schedule. Make that job coincide with your favorite radio program or some reading aloud in the family group—a smart trick, incidentally, for many jobs that don't require your individual attention.

Cherish Your Iron

A clean, well kept electric iron gives efficient service. With a damp cloth, while the iron is warm, wipe off any starch marks. If the iron sticks while pressing, rub it over salt sprinkled on a paper. Once a month rub the warm iron with beeswax or paraffin and then rub over a clean cloth or paper until the excess wax is removed.

The Fascist Minded

Have you a Fascist mind? . . . No! No! A thousand times no! Have I? . . . Not on your life! But—we both know plenty of persons who have. Who are they?

Terming someone Fascist minded" is becoming a favorite method of name calling. And we are going to hear more of this opprobrium as Republicans and Democrats don their fighting clothes, and also as the war draws to an end we have more time to fight among ourselves over politics and peace and reconstruction. We are even going to hear the term hurled across bridge tables and back fences.

Most of us have only a vague idea of what we mean when we call someone "Fascist minded." It is a good term to fling at our personal enemies, but it will lose its effectiveness if wasted on them. It should be saved for the real Fascists — or potential Fascists, whom we are going to encounter more and more as ideals come into a clash over the building of the future world.

Others' Opinions Not Respected

What really then is the Fascist mind?

In pursuit of an answer to this question I turned to the usual academic definition: "Fascism is a supernationalism making the corporate state supreme, subjecting the individual in word, thought, emotion and deed to the state."

Not a great deal of help in running down the Fascist minded in our offices, clubs, social groups. Still it gave a clew. I next consulted a learned authority. "A Fascist-minded person," said she (yes it was a she) is one who does not respect the dignity of the individual."

Oh yes! Imperious dowagers . . . bossy wives or husbands . . . swaggering Army and Navy martinets . . . dictatorial bosses . . . upstage secretaries . . . high-handed bureaucrats . . . overbearing industrialists . . . autocratic labor leaders . . . swelled-up Congressmen—oh a lot of people!

However that wasn't being as objective as I started out to be. What were the beginnings of a Fascist mind? How did it start? How could we be on guard against it in our own country, among our associates, within ourselves?

Order, Efficiency Its Catchwords

Possible Mussolini would hold the answer. He was the world's Number 1 Fascist, originally the mentor of Hitler. For that information I turned to Lilian T. Mowrer's clear and forceful exposition "Rip Ride of Aggression" of how the Axis partners and their gang took over Europe and a good part of Asia. "Fascism," says Mrs. Mowrer, "was forged in Italy by Musolini who remodled society on the pattern of an army; it is the permanent militarization of a people." Her story of how the blustering Mussolini sold fascism to Italy and eventually to Europe through the glorification of war, order, discipline and nationalistic pride provides many a clew by which the incipient Fascist may be recognized.

He (the term is inclusive of "she") is the proudly practical "feet on the ground," realist who sneers at idealists, "theorists" and "visionaries" and proclaims that "you can't change human nature."

He accepts war as an inevitable expression of natural forces," holds stoutly there is going to be a war every 20 years and we might as well prepare for it.

He maintains that 90 per cent of the people are morons who haven't sense enough to take care of themselves and who require a strong armed boss.

Bullying Tactics Are Preferred

He thinks that as this country is bigger, better and smarter than any other we should clean up Mexico and take over Canada, build the biggest Army and Navy and tell the rest of the world where to get off.

He always has a whipping boy of some kind to drag out—the Jews or the Negroes or the British, or some religious or political group to prove his own superiority.

He makes much ado about order and discipline and efficiency and his favorite expression is "Well, what can you expect in a democracy?"

If he is a Republican he is a 100 per cent one; if a Democrat, it is in the same percentage, and he never puts principle above party.

He is a member of a tightly compacted group of some kind, industrial, political, religious, racial or national, and ready to war on all other groups.

He never makes people feel in presence that they are human beings to be listened to instead of talked at.

His world horizon ends at the Atlantic and Pacific, his vision of tomorrow on the calendar of yesterday.

U. S. Dress Designers Promise Sound Fashion Despite Limitations

To corner and fire questions at six of America's foremost dress designers at one fell swoop is for a fashion editor like having the mountains come to Mohammed . . . and bearing gifts.

We heard from a carrier pigeon that they were all going to be in town over the weekend. We found ourselves having cocktails with Omar Kiam (not the tentmaker, but creator of beautiful clothes), Jo Copeland of the exquisitely young but sure and ladylike touch, Nettie Rosenstein of the flawless, molded silhouette, Jean Louis of Hattie Carnegie, Ethel Frankau of Bergdorf Goodman, Fira Benenson of Bonwit Teller's Salon de Couture.

"How do you feel increasing limitations will affect the future of design?" we queried.

"It will not cramp our style," said Miss Copeland, smiling. "We will continue to adjust our designs to the American way of life. We're ready to make the most of whatever comes."

"We promise the women of America sounder fashion and more beautiful clothes than ever before," said Miss Rosenstein.

According to Miss Benenson, "Women will not have to sacrifice any part of looking lovely."

"How about hoarding?"

"It is unnecessary."

"At this moment, while it is impossible to predict future silhouette, we can say that there will be some change . . . there always is. But not enough to outmode the simple classic clothes that many women already own."

About regimentation?

"Nonsense!" . . . (unanimous).

The two gentlemen smiled their approval, gallantly let the ladies do the talking, and topped off our slightly hurried interview by paying the check.

It is significant that each of the four ladies wore suits . . . Miss Rosenstein very slick in gray . . . Miss Benenson lush in black with black fox and pearls . . . Miss Frankau also in trim black . . . Navy striped worsted was the choice of Miss Copeland, whose hat was a confection of crisp coin-dotted net perched on an even keel with both eyebrows. All wore tailored white blouses . . . three in satin. J. C.

Your Figure Madam!

By Ida Jean Kain

As the homemaker, you not only have to know your points in the new food rationing system but, much more important, how to juggle them to safeguard your family's health through good nutrition. It is no easy job.

You will have to think twice before handing over your points to the grocer. A can of pineapple juice and a can of tomato juice count the same in points. But you have to consider nutrition as well as the menu. The pineapple juice does not furnish as much vitamin C as the tomato juice. An even better buy is a can of tomatoes which costs a couple of points more but furnishes one-third more vitamin C than tomato juice. But the best buy of all is grapefruit juice for only 8 points compared to the 13 for tomatoes, and almost twice as high in vitamin C.

Whenever fresh citrus fruits, oranges and grapefruit, are scarce, you will have to allocate a good share of your points to fruit juices. Otherwise, the menus might be inadequate in this highly essential vitamin. To augment the rationed juices, serve plenty of raw cabbage, cook the potatoes in their jackets and take special care in cooking green leafy vegetables to preserve their C value.

We eat so many apples that they become an important sources of vitamin C during the winter. To cut the loss in making applesauce, cook quickly in as little water as possible, and in a tightly covered utensil. The loss is greater when apples are baked or made into pie.

Serve fresh tomatoes whenever they are available instead of the canned variety. One small tomato furnishes one-third the adult requirement of vitamin C for the day.

Most of the green leafy vegetables so high in vitamins and minerals taste so much better freshly cooked that there is no temptation to spend points on them. There will be no shortage of spinach, we are told, and with reasonable care in cooking little of the nutritive value is lost. Try serving spinach raw. You can't put together a more delicious salad than raw spinach mixed with onion, celery and lettuce.

Many of the greens are high not only in vitamins (carotene, which is changed into vitamin A in the body, and in vitamin C), but in calcium—a mineral in which all cereals and most of the other foods except dairy products are deficient. One-half cup of cooked turnip greens supplies about one-third the adult allowance of calcium for the day. That is worth remembering, come milk rationing. Greens are also rich in iron.

Your Baby and Mine

By Myrtle Meyer Eldred

Why don't parents take advantage of the long months prior to their children's births to make themselves conversant with the foundations of good child care and training?

I do not know any satisfactory answer. Child care ought to be a mother's chief concern. When she walls herself against advice it can only be some sense of personal inferiority will not allow her to admit there is anything she needs to be told. She prefers to make mistakes rather than appear to be ignorant.

Mrs. B. D. asks, "I wonder why mothers do not prepare themselves during pregnancy and avoid so many mistakes? Are they blind, deaf—or just dumb? It takes such a little common sense, plus some good professional help, to rear a healthy baby.

"I am going to tell you a story that is the acme of something or other. Five years ago a baby was brought to the doctor's office. The baby was 8 months old and fat. But the mother thought it cried too much. The husband had not been able to cure the baby's spoiled nature by spanking! Maybe something was wrong.

"The doctor asked about the feeding and formula and she—a former school teacher—said, '2 parts water and 1 part milk.' The doctor said somewhat impatiently, 'And what else?' mentioning cereal, eggs, meat, vegetables, etc., to which she said, 'Oh, he doesn't get any of those things.'

"The baby cried most of the time and got spanked for being spoiled, yet the parents had to increase the number of his feedings until he was getting milk once an hour. It seems never to have occurred to her that the formula she got for the baby when she brought this breast-fed baby home, wasn't suitable all the rest of his life.

"Why are people so careful during the pre-natal period and so neglectful after baby is born? Why don't parents study child care? Why don't doctors tell parents that formulas and feedings have to be increased as the child grows? Why do people deride child-care columns and say that no doubt the writers never had a child? Why do so many persons consider crying to be a habit and assume taking care of a crying baby will spoil him? Couldn't you answer these questions in your column?"

There is no answer.

The knowledge of the correct procedures is easy enough to get from dozens of sources, beginning with the personal doctor, the Government, magazines, books and newspapers.

Our leaflet, "The First Six Weeks," is an introduction to early child care principles. It may be had by sending a 3-cent stamped, self-addressed envelope with your request to Mrs. Eldred in care of this newspaper.

There are some ways of playing which a child should learn as soon as he is old enough to be let outside unsupervised by the mother.

These rules are imperative since no matter how affluent the parent it may be taken for granted that there never will be a tricycle for every child, a sieve for every sandpile player, a wagon or what have you. There have to be some rules for sharing these treasurers to which every child will be respectful.

Childlike, if one child comes out and jumps on a tricycle, immediately the whole crew would do likewise. So begins the wrangling and the screeching while all the other toys lie idle.

Keep in mind that if there are rules they are adhered to by host and guest alike. Whoever gets to the tricycle first is entitled to have it until he has had his turn. Since small children cannot tell time, and the mother is presumably busy elsewhere, then the number of times Thomas can ride up and down the walk will be his "turn." Then the trike belongs to Margery and so on around the circle.

Each large toy, of which there may be only one or two, should have its limits of use. The sieve can be used five times. The child can swing on the rings five times. There will always be some bystander, eager for his turn, who will keep track of the times.

Far from hampering the usefullness of the toy, it makes it the more attractive. The child who is standing by watching to insure that he has his turn is as busy as if he were playing.

Our leaflets, "Selfishness and Jealousy," may be had by sending a 3-cent stamped, self-addressed envelope with your request to Myrtle Meyer Eldred in care of this newspaper.

Admiral Thomas C. Hart—

Navy Department Uses Wisdom of Admiral Hart

This is another in the series of stories about the men who are running the war. The next will appear on Friday.

By Patricia Grady

The best laid plans of fighting Admirals have to be thrown overboard for the duration.

Scrappy little Admiral Thomas C. Hart, retired, thought he'd be relaxing in retired comfort on his farm in Connecticut about this time, but the Navy Department asked the benefit of his naval wisdom so he's on the job, doing his bit to lick the Axis. As commander in chief of the Asiatic Fleet when the Pacific blow fell at Pearl Harbor, and later as supreme commander of the allied navies in that area, Admiral Hart has a lot of first-hand fighting information.

Colorful, high-colored "Tommy Hart is now a member of the Navy Department's General Board, composed of a group of "elder statesmen" whose years of Navy leadership have given them the wisdom and experience necessary to help the Secretary of the Navy solve some of the problems that cross his desk. This board, which came into being over 40 years ago with Admiral Dewey at its head, advises on any problems that the Secretary puts before it.

Is Expert on Submarine Warfare

An expert on submarine warfare—while serving a previous tour on the general board he sponsored the development of a new type of sub, later known as "Hart's submarine" — he realistically views the Nazi underseas menace. "We will not be able to completely clear the German submarines from the seas until we have marched into Berlin," he declares unequivocally. "That is not to say that we will not be able to cut down the losses from subs, but no matter how effective our efforts are, the menace cannot be completely wiped out. This is self-evident from the nature of the sub itself."

Harris & Ewing

ADMIRAL "TOMMY" HART

After 2½ years in the Pacific, Admiral Hart came back to the United States with objective eyes. Many of the small selfishnesses he saw, left him exasperated, but he is fully aware that it is a small minority who cause the trouble. "All in all," he says with pride, "America has gone to war well."

This officer, who has a well-earned reputation for toughness, makes his points quickly, but after deliberation. "The emphasis on quantity production has made for some misunderstanding on the part of the American people," he points out. "One fighting ship manned by determined men may be worth a number of ships manned by untrained personnel. Quality is just as important as quantity.

Has No Patience With Excuses

"Most Americans," he continues, "do not understand the war in the Pacific. They are exposed to too many opinions, some qualified, some not for them to get any clear idea of the broad picture. This coupled with a lack of geographic background, makes for a slightly muddled state of mind."

Admiral Hart has been heard to remark that he has the most violent temper in the Navy. He has patience with human mistakes, but little patience with excuses. Many a legend has grown up around this fiery officer who has several times assumed colossal responsibilities in the course of his distinguished career. Wiry and tanned, he plays golf, shoots, rides, hunts, used to play a good game of tennis, but claims he does them all badly, because he does them for fun.

Definitely a family man, the admiral loves to talk about his children. "They're pretty satisfactory children," he'll tell you, with the light in his eye making up for his deliberate understatement. Two daughters are finishing their undergraduate years at Vassar, one was recently married, and his two sons are on sea duty for the Navy.

Is a Native Of Michigan

This admiral who believes that "you can't become a good golfer if you've never learned to golf, and that you learn to fight by fighting," was born in Genessee County, Mich. After graduation from the Naval Academy he saw sea duty in the Spanish-American War and during the World War commanded a submarine force, for which he won a Dishtinguished Service Medal.

After graduation from the Naval War College and Army War College, he assumed command of the U. S. S. Mississippi. Came years of sea duty, interrupted by a tour as superintendent of the Naval Academy, and then service in Washington as a member of the general board and later as its chairman. He assumed duties of commander in chief of the Asiatic fleet in July, 1939, and for his leadership during the early perilous months of the war in the Pacific he was given a gold star in lieu of a second Distinguished Service Medical.

Miss Gavit Is Wed to Ensign Call

Now on a brief honeymoon before going to Annapolis, where the bridegroom is stationed, are Ensign and Mrs. Dean Call. The bride, the former Miss Suzanna Gavit, daughter of Bernard C. Gavit, general counsel for the War Manpower Commission and Mrs. Gavit of Bloomington, Ind.

Their marriage took place on Saturday at the Statler Hotel, with the Rev. James H. Taylor, pastor of the Central Presbyterian Church, officiating.

Given in marriage by her father, former dean of the law school at Indianapolis University, the bride wore a Navy blue silk crepe frock, with navy felt hat trimmed in white pique and a corsage of white orchids. Following the ceremony a small reception took place for members of the families and a few intimate friends.

The bride attended the University of Indiana, where she was a member of Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority. Ensign Call, a native of Gaston, Ind., was a student at Indiana University Law School before being commissioned in the Navy.

Among the guests at the wedding were Supreme Justice and Mrs. Wiley B. Rutledge, their daughter, Miss Mary Lou Rutledge, and son, Neal Rutledge; Mr. and Mrs. Paul V. McNutt and their daughter, Miss Louise McNutt; Fowler V. Harper, deputy chairman of the War Manpower Commission; Mrs. Harper and their daughter, Miss Constance Harper.

War Stamp Corsages Are Now Outdated

Corsage bouquets fashioned of war stamps are definitely "old hat."

Mrs. Jesse Jones, wife of the Secretary of Commerce, was one of the first to brighten up her tailleur with this novelty. But that was months ago. Since then many patriotic women have pinned these flower like clusters of stamps done up in cellophane to their shoulders.

But here is something new! For $18.75—the price of a war bond—you can get a whole arm bouquet of war stamps. The work—and it is work—of putting together all those tiny squares of paper with greenery to point it up, is being done by Mrs. Walter C. Burke, who lives at the Westchester, and is giving her time as her contribution to the war effort.

Mrs. Burke's deft fingers have fashioned many clever favors for parties, all with stamps. Recently she did a set of parachute jumpers with figures purchased at the 5 and 10 and parachutes made from stamps—$1.50 worth. She also has made soldiers in action, using stamps for bullets.

Russian Singer Decries American Tendency to Belittle Native Talents

Mme. Maximovitch Has Colorful and Busy Career

By Peggy Preston

"Americans must get over this inferiority complex regarding their own artistic talents . . . they are too modest for their own good.

Mara Maximovitch, the dramatic soprano who was heard at Dumbarton Oaks Saturday night at the concert for delegates to the conference of Women's Committees for Symphony Orchestras, has no patience with the American habit of looking to Europe for 'great' works of art.

"Why do you insist upon looking abroad for something you have right under your noses?" the Russian-born Mme. Maximovitch wanted to know yesterday. "It is a foolish habit."

Like herself, the singer's language is colorful and strong. She will convince you within a few minutes that Americans are today producing the greatest music in the world. So firm is her belief in this that a year ago she defied tradition to present an all-American concert program at Carnegie Hall. She offered her audience and critics the works of such composers as Douglas Moore, Theodore Chandler, Ernest Bacon and Washington's own Mary Howe. And in return she got the greatest ovation of her career.

MME. MARIA MAXIMOVITCH

Is Taking Ph. D. At Columbia

"I ask only that Americans listened to their own songs without bias," she said. "If they listen not with their ears or their hearts, but with their nerves, they will hear the fresh, invigorating spirit of their country that their writers are capturing."

One of the busiest sopranos in New York, Mme. Maximovitch manages an almost superhuman program. Four or five concerts a week, appearances with the New York Russian Opera Company, the management of her household and two children . . . all this she accomplishes with ease. Her leisure time she devotes to study for the Ph. D. in philosophy that she is taking at Columbia.

"I have the most preposterous good health," she explains, reaching the while for a cigaret, an article traditionally taboo with members of her profession.

There is little of the ordinary about Mme. Maximovitch. Born in Russia, her lineage is as mixed as an American's. Her mother was of English and German parents; her father of Russian and French. Most of her early life was spent in France and she became a citizen of the United States when she married an American diplomat in 1932.

Was in Norway During Invasion

Between the years of 1932 and 1941 she was on hand to witness the coming of war to Europe. She and her family were in Germany in 1938 to behold the Nazi program of Jewish persecutions; in Czecho-Slovakia in the summers of '36, '37 and '38, and in Norway at the time of the invasion.

Harrowing experiences? Yes, but Mme. Maximovitch is not one to dwell on unpleasant things that cannot be remedied. She prefers to describe her personal meetings with the forces of destruction in Europe, as revealing.

She is convinced that the ills of the Europe she knew can be cured only by a strenuous program of reeducation. "The European mind as it is today, can never grasp the meaning of democracy as you know it here," she went on in discussing a subject upon which she is qualified to speak by virtue of personal experience, plus degrees in governmental science from several universities.

Here in Washington, Mme. Maximovitch had one of those busy weekends that she so enjoys. When not rehearsing or singing, she was occupied with seeing her many friends in the city, chief among them being Mrs. Walter Bruce Howe, whose music she considers to be America's finest.

Benefit Fetes Hold Interest Of Capitalites

Yesterday's calendar was dotted with scores of parties, almost all of them being held in connection with three matters of public interest, namely, the Chamber Music Guild, the Greek War Relief Association and the conference of woman's committee for symphony orchestras.

The Chilean Ambassador and Senora de Michels loaned their Embassy for the program of chamber music and buffet supper last night that was for the benefit of the guild. Prior to the affair, Mrs. Sidney Carrere Lee entertained a small company at dinner before the concert, as did the political adviser to the State Department and Mrs. James Clement Dunn.

There was a large gathering at the United Nations War Relief Center for the regular Sunday afternoon lecture and exhibit that are sponsored this month by the Greek War Relief Association. Among the luncheons preceding the affair, was that given by Mrs. Truxtun Beale.

Delegates to the fourth biennial conference of woman's committee for symphony orchestras, that closes here today, were feted at several parties during the day. Mrs. Joseph E. Davies, wife of the former United States Ambassador to the Soviet Union, was hostess at a luncheon in their honor at her home on Klingle Road. Following the afternoon concert, Mrs. Robert Low Bacon entertained the delegates at a reception. This afternoon Mrs. George Hewitt Myers will give a tea in their honor.

Friendly Sons of St. Patrick Sponsor Play for Milk Fund

An all-male cast is no longer the rule in the annual play of the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick. When three of its "sons" were called into the service, the society turned to its "daughters." Leading parts in this year's play will be taken by Miss Lynn Allison, soprano, who will appear as Bedalia O'Brien, and Miss Mary Deery, singer and dancer, to whom has been assigned the role of Mary Ellen McNamara. Both of these talented young women are well known in music and dramatic circles in Washington. The play will be presented at the dinner of the society on St. Patrick's Day, and will be repeated in the main ballroom of the Mayflower Hotel on Friday evening, at 8:30 o'clock for the benefit of the Milk Fund which is sponsored by the Ladies of Charity of the District of Columbia.

The title of this year's play is "Wanst Upon a Time," a period when "almost anything could happen, and probably did." It was written by Thomas W. Brahany. The production will be under the direction of Mr. Connell, with Dr. Edward Larkin as director of stage setting and properties. George H. Wilson and Sidney Seidenmann will direct the music and Jack Mullane will furnish the costumes. The cast includes: George H. O'Connor, William F. Raymond, Bernard T. Fitzgerald, Charles T. Tittmann, Fred East, Thomas F. Slattery, Lieut. William P. Shanahan, Ambrose A. Durkin and Thomas W. Brahany.

While the play is a presentation of Irish songs, there is a thread of a story as background for the solos and choruses. The scene is Wicklow County, Ireland, and the time March 17, 1801. One of the episodes relates to the career of Col. Matthew Lyon, a Wicklow County immigrant, who came to this country in Revolutionary days.

British Stars Here Today To Pay Debt of Gratitude

Will Attend White House Ceremony Tomorrow; Merrymaking to Mark Earle's Early Films; Items of News and Gossip of the Theater

QUIETLY and without the usual preliminary fanfare, a group of top-flight screen stars will arrive at Union Station tonight at 8:05 o'clock, from Hollywood, to attend the special White House ceremony tomorrow, when President Roosevelt will accept a pledge giving to the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis all the United States profits from the new, feature motion picture, "Forever and a Day."

TAYLOR HOLMES

The delegation, headed by Sir Cedric Hardwicke, representing the committee of artists of British origin who donated their talents to this film drama, includes Brian Aherne, Roland Young, Lady Hardwicke, Ruth Warrick, Mr. and Mrs. C. Aubrey Smith, Victor Saville, one of the six directors of the picture, and Lloyd Richards, who served as production coordinator.

Also attending the ceremony will be N. Peter Rathvon, president of the Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corp., and S. Barret McCormick, advertising and publicity director for RKO-Radio Pictures.

The party will be escorted to the White House tomorrow morning for the presentation ceremony at 11:15 o'clock, by Basil O'Connor, president of the National Foundation.

"Forever and a Day" had its genesis in the desire of a group of artists, who originally came to this country from England and achieved success in Hollywood, to express their appreciation of the hospitality extended them here and their gratitude for what this country has done for British charities. They felt that individually they could not hope to make adequate repayment, but that by pooling all their talents in the making of a motion picture, they could contribute something of real worth, if the proceeds form this film were turned over to designated American charities, or to the charities of the other democratic countries in which the film might be shown. Their unanimous decision was that in this country the beneficiary should be the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis, so dear to the President's heart. In this they had the heartiest acquiescence of Mr Rathvon, president of the parent company of RKO-Radio, which financed and produced "Forever and a Day" and will distribute it without profit. In each country where the picture will be shown, the profits will be given to a national charity, which its government will accept on behalf of the charity. It does not always, it seems, "begin at home."

Two years in the making, and produced with the full cooperation of the executive heads of every major Hollywood studio, "Forever and a Day" enlisted the services of 78 of our leading screen personalities, 7 prominent directors and 21 distinguished writers. Too numerous to be reproduced here, their names very easily could comprise an authentic "Blue Book" of the film capital.

Two Old Favorites Score a Hit

Filtering in from the Middle West comes word that Taylor Holmes and Lenore Ulric, two veterans of the stage high in the esteem of the Capital's most discriminating theatergoers, contribute the two outstanding performances in "the first new, top-flight farce to reach Chicago in nearly a year." That would be Joseph Fields' comedy of "The Doughgirls"—which Washington saw and embraced with hilarious delight prior to New York—as presented by the first touring company sent out by Max Gordon to regale the farther reaches of the country. Our old and cherished friend Taylor Holmes was last seen on a local stage in the less happy assignment of Mr. Dunne in "Vickie," and before that registered one of the notable hits with the late George M. Cohan in "I'd Rather Be Right." The fact that Miss Ulric has not been seen on a local rostrum since something called "Her Man of Wax" years ago has not at all dimmed memory of the luster of her performances in "The Bird of Paradise," "Kiki" and a long line of David Belasco hits. Nice to see both of these good people on top again.

After a considerable stretch of pictures placing scant stress on frivolity, the Earle Theater in its forthcoming Paramount bookings will be going in handsomely for variety and the gayer moods. The change in pace will be touched off by "Star Spangled Rhythm," taking possession of the screen when "Air Force" relinquishes it. This musical fol-de-rol embraces so many stellar names that even a 24-sheet couldn't hold them all. After that will come "Happy Go Lucky" (with or without hyphens), a Technicolor musical with Mary Martin, Dick Powell, Eddie Bracken, Betty Hutton and Rudy Vallee in the top spots. The variety we were speaking of will be supplied by "China," directed by John Farrow, maker of "Wake Island" and "Commandos Strike at Dawn," and boasting such stars as Loretta Young, a visitor in town at the time of the President's birthday celebrations; Alan Ladd, who may or may not be carrying a "gun for hire" in this one, and William Bendix, who has been going like a lot of houses on fire ever since "Wake Island."

Come the night of Wednesday, March 17, which is by way of being St. Patrick's Day, the Washington Variety Club will be throwing a Grand Irish Carnival, which appropriately promises to make all previous club soirees turn green with envy. Those two doughty old sons of Erin, Robert O'Grace and George "Cotton" McCrouch will be the shamrocked "Kings for the Night."

The-Better-Part-of-Valor Note

How's about the loan of your shillalah—just in case!

Diversified Bill at Trans-Lux

Progress of the war, of course, once again dominates the news section of the new bill at the Trans-Lux Theater. The victorious advance of United Nations arms is pictured on both sides of the globe.

On the Russian front, the Red offensive at the height of its momentum is pictured in films devoted to the smashing victories in the south and the swing of the tide toward the north. In the South Pacific the "Yanks mop up in New Guinea" in battle scenes rushed direct to the screen from the area of General MacArthur's great land drive.

Other news "clips" of more than ordinary interest depict Mme. Chiang Kai-shek's return to Wellesley, her alma mater; the launching of the new United States cruiser Astoria; girl parachute packers busy at Lakehurst, N. J.; the return of the old "horse and buggy days" to the West, and the Academy awards to James Cagney and Greer Garson for the best screen acting of 1942.

The short reels are comparably varied. "Information Please'" has for its guest star Howard Lindsay, coauthor of "Life With Father" and coproducer of "Arsenic and Old Lace." The Victory Reel for the week is the universally shown "Troop Train" and memories of a more peaceful era are revived by "Cruise Sports," devoted to pleasant days en route to South America. For laughs, Popeye is up there in a cartoon comedy emphasizing the hilarities of "Spinach Fer Britain."

Killer Diller

Most sensational song number in "Happy Go Lucky" is called "Murder" and it is sung by Betty Hutton. Betty has been slaying service men with the number on recent personal appearances at Army camps.

Fiery Dancer

CARMEN AMAYA, foremost of the flamencan dancers, a new addition to the stellar cast of "Priorities of 1942," now in its third and final week at the National Glamour Is the Word for Martha!

MARTHA O'DRISCOLL, whose name perches high on Hollywood's roster of pulchritude—as you will be seeing when she appears in a featured role with Maureen O'Hara, John Garfield and Patricia Morison in "The Fallen Sparrow." Or is that the one from which Mr. Garfield withdrew? Anyhow, Miss O'Driscoll is in it and it will be coming along, presumably, to RKO-Keith's

HEDDA HOPPER

End of the Rainbow!

Hollywood, Calif., March 14.—The Cagney boys, Jimmy and Bill, who've been searching all over the country for a distinguished actress to play with Jimmy in "McLeod's Folly," have ended their search. They have signed Miss Grace George. Grace, who has been one of the top stars of the American theater for 40 years, has never played in a picture before. She's just been starring on Broadway in "Spring Again." Years ago, when she and her stepdaughter, Alice Brady, starred in a Broadway play, Hollywood wanted to make it into a picture, but Grace had other plans, and Alice came on to our town to make her own career. So it was pretty smart of our Academy winner, Jimmy, and his producer, Bill, to snare a woman we of the theater have revered and admired for the past 40 years. They couldn't have made a finer choice.

JAMES CAGNEY

Resurrection

Twentieth Century certainly went way back in the files for that old song, "Goodbye Dolly Gray," which they'll weave into a musical for Carole Landis. I talked with Carole yesterday. She said next to her marriage in England, her greatest thrill was meeting the Queen. When she and the rest of the girls played in North Africa, they were thanked by Gen. Eisenhower, who asked if there was anything special he could do for them. Carole ups and says, "Yes, I'd like two more weeks with my husband in London." And that's why she didn't come home with Kay Francis, Martha Raye, and Mitzi Mayfair. . . . I didn't believe that Don Ameche would play the lead in "Claudia." Don's only human and he can't do every picture at Twentieth. So they're paging Franchot Tone for the part. He's an elegant choice.

Red Carpet Out

Welcome is on the mat for Nancy Kelly in "Tornado," and will wonders never cease! She'll sing two songs. We didn't even know she could squeak! . . . The reported romance between Lela Rogers and Don Loper is really a scream. Don already has a wife in Charleston, S. C., and he, Ginger, and Lela have been friends ever since those "Black Bottom" days. . . . Leo McCarey and Frank Cravett are busy on a picture story with a Mexican background. . . . Bette Davis, instead of going directly to New Hampshire, took a train to Mexico City and, with her friend Mrs. Byrne, got off before they arrived there. A car was waiting and they'll tour all the small towns for a couple of weeks, finishing their stay in Mexico City, with Bette making a personal appearance in the interest of our good neighbor policy. She's never been down there before.

Just Asking

What goes on between Ida Lupino and Olivia de Havilland? In "Devotion," they were like cooing doves. Since then they've been rowing and making up. It's a sight nobody on the lot seems to be able to understand. I wonder if the girls do. . . . When I wrote, on August 5, that Alexander Korda was signing up as producer with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, I almost had my head taken off. Yesterday, after much secrecy, he moved his goods and chattels onto the Metro lot. . . . Since Louis B. Mayer distinguished himself at the Academy award dinner, our wags are remarking that he should remake "My Son, My Son." . . . Incidentally, Mary Pickford, one of the founders of the Academy, resigned yesterday. I don't blame her.

What an Army

Ran into George Murphy on "This Is the Army" set. He tells me when the trip to North Africa was canceled for Cary Grant, Don Barclay, and himself, they already had condensed "Hellzapoppin'" into an hour and a quarter show. Olson and Johnson turned over all their gags and songs, and helped rehearse them. Cary and Barclay are doing Southern camps in sketches they tried out here at the canteen. What a thrilling sight (and quite a chore) getting 450 soldiers in the camera at once. At least two dozen boys in it, who are now playing chorus boys on Army pay, used to make $1500 a week. One of them is Henry Rosenblatt, from the Metropolitan Opera.

You would never know pretty Edith Barrett in "Jane Eyre." Makeup has transformed her from a miss of 22 to a darling old lady of 65.

LEONARD LYONS

Broadway Potpourri

New York, March 14.

Just before Gen. Mark Clark set out with Eisenhower for the invasion of Africa, and while some correspondents were purchasing snow shoes and fur-lined clothes, General Clark decided to test the secrecy of the venture. He used two correspondents as his guinea pigs . . . "What do you think is going to happen?" he asked them . . . "You're going to invade at Casablanca," they replied . . . "Why Casablanca?" asked Clark, with great dismay. "Why not Dakar?" . . . "No, not Dakar," said the reporters. "Casablanca" . . . "What about an invasion of the Continent?" asked General Clark . . . "No, you're not going to do that," the reporters insisted. "It's Casablanca" . . . "But what makes you think that?" asked Clark, calmly . . . "Because," was the answer, "it's logical."

LYNN FONTANNE

Gardner Cowles is expected to resign from the Office of War Information before July 1, to concentrate on the Willkie campaign . . . Cecil Brown, author of one of the great war books, "Suez to Singapore," has refused to permit the book to be published in England and Australia. The Britishers wanted to cut too much of it, because of censorship and the libel laws . . . At the Overseas Press Club, Isaac Don Levine admitted that he was the ghost writer of the General Krivitsky series which ran in the Saturday Evening Post, and that he had helped inspire Jan Valtin's "Out of the Night" . . . Harold Guinzburg, publisher and head of Viking Press, has been offered the job of heading the Bureau of Publications at the OWI.

Ruth Mitchell, sister of the late Gen. Billy Mitchell, tells of that day in England, in 1918, when her brother brought to her house a Yorkshire terrier he had taken from Field Marshal Lord French . . . The field marshal had insisted that the terrier was a one-man dog and extremely faithful: Mitchell vied for the terrier's affections, then took him home, and wired the field marshal: "You're right. He's still a one-man dog—but it's not the same man."

Eleanor Roosevelt and Princess Martha of Norway will do a sister act at the Red Cross rally in Madison Square Garden on Monday night . . . Columbia Films wants to make a movie short of the Hecht-Rose-Hart-Weill pageant, "We Will Never Die," and distribute it on a nonprofit basis. The pageant will be presented in the large cities which are requesting it . . . The Japanese radio has admitted, for the first time, that Guadalcanal no longer is theirs . . . The Army and Navy has ruled that unless all enemy aliens are excluded from the various canteens here—where some of them now work—servicemen will be barred there.

Jules Bache owns one of the finest private art collections in the world. He spent many years and much money collecting these paintings . . . Once, shortly after the stock market crash, Bache gave a dinner party at which Lynn Fontanne was one of the guests. "How much did these wonderful paintings cost you?" she asked the host . . . "A lot of money, 15 million dollars," Bach sighed. "And now, after this crash, I don't think I could sell them for 10 per cent of their cost" . . . "Fine, that's fine," said Miss Fontanne. "It means that now you can relax and enjoy them."

Some employes of a New York night club recently were arrested on white slavery charges, and then were released. The FBI men who made the investigation questioned, among others, Press Agent Eddie Jaffe, who lived in a room above the night club. "I visited the club a number of times," Jaffe confided to one FBI man, "but to tell the truth, not only didn't I see anything to make me suspicious, but I never even met a girl there. I guess maybe I was unlucky" . . . "Not unlucky," suggested the FBI man. "Just unattractive."

Collins and Peterson at Gayety

"Victory Parade," the current revue at the Gayety Theater, is an attraction with an abundance of keen comedy, plus a stunning headliner in Darlene.

Darlene, making her initial appearance here this season, turns out to be quite a stunning and shapely miss, and, we are happy to report, an exceptionally fine dancer.

Collins and Peterson, a comedy team which has played the F Street theaters numberless times, are the featured comedy stars. The boys employ a combination of rough-and-ready comedy and satirical wit which is, for the most part, original and uproariously funny. Sammy Spears, pint-sized Hebrew funster, also scores in the comedy department.

Completing the cast are Eddie Edwards, singer; Diane King, who is seen in several beauty parades; "Sachel" Robinson, a sepian dancer of unusual merit, and Jim Fitzgerald, offering a novelty act.

2 D.C. Area Men Are Decorated For Gallantry

The Silver Star for gallantry in action in North Africa has been awarded to two men, the War Department announced yesterday in reporting citations for 38 members of the Armored Force.

RUPPERT

Among those cited were:

First Lieut. John P. Ruppert, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles F. Ruppert of 1832 Lamont Street Northwest, and husband of Kathleen Ruppert, a nurse at Emergency Hospital here.

Second Lieut. Paul Morton, son of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Morton of 511 High Street, Alexandria, Va., whose citation was originally announced in The Post of January 9.

Ruppert received the citation for gallantry in action in French Morrocco. The citation read: "The officer led a mounted patrol into positions under enemy fire, gaining valuable information regarding their composition and disposition."

A District native, Ruppert, 23, attended the School of the Nativity and Gonzaga High School and was graduated from Georgetown University in 1941.

MORTON

At Georgetown, he majored in military training and was commissioned a second lieutenant after graduation. As a civilian, his major avocations were riding and golf.

Called immediately on active duty, Ruppert trained at Fort Benning, Ga., before he was sent overseas in November, 1942. Correspondence from him last week revealed that he was on special assignments. Word of his advancement to first lieutenancy has just been released by the War Department.

A similar award has gone to Lieut. Col. William M. Stokes of Lynchburg, Va., it was also announced.

National Symphony Orchestra Gives Toccata Splendid Tone

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Hans Kindler conducts the National Symphony Orchestra on Sunday afternoon in Constitution Hall. Soloist: Raya Garbusova. Program: Toccata (Frescobaldi-Kindler), Symphony No. 2 in D major (Sibelius), Violoncello Concerto in B minor (Dvorak), Waltzes from "Der Rosenkavalier" (Strauss), "Walkuerenritt" (Wagner).

Custom has made the National Symphony Orchestra's last Sunday concert of the season a deference to the majority wishes of the patrons in the matter of program, and the compositions performed yesterday afternoon in Constitution Hall were those for which the greatest number of votes had been cast. Naturally, an exception had to be made for the great artist, Raya Garbusova, who had already selected the Dvorak violoncello concerto, and her choice was gratefully received, inasmuch as this beautiful work has not been over-played in the country where it was composed nearly half a century ago. It was Dvorak's farewell gesture to the United States, as his E minor symphony had been the first, but it has never been as popular here as the symphony, the F major string quartet or the seventh "Humoresque" which represent to the average listener the only reminiscences of his American sojourn.

BROWN

Miss Garbusova gave the work a poetic reading wholly sympathetic with its content. Her tone was not always large enough to give the solo instrument its due place in the texture, but it was admirable in refined eloquence and tasteful phrasing, while she handled the technical difficulties with ease and assurance. She has an ingratiating style that is the concomitant of her engaging personality, and the auditors liked her performance so much that they recalled her three times.

Dr. Kindler began the concert with his impressive transcription of a toccata by Girolamo Frescobaldi, the greatest organist of the first half of the seventeenth century. The orchestra never played it better than they did yesterday, not even when they recorded it, and the tonal values were splendid. Frescobaldi, who died 42 years before the birth of Bach, might be called the Marco Enrico Bossi of his time, so high was his fame in his native Italy and so international his influence. One likes to think that he may have played this very toccata on the day when 30,000 Romans flocked to hear his first performance in St. Peter's Church.

The "requested" symphony was the D major by Jan Sibelius, that remarkable work in which the Finnish composer began his innovations in the treatment of symphonic form. He not only reversed the established procedure by introducing thematic fragments, uniting them in the development section, and dispersing them again in the recapitulation but he also produced an atmosphere of remoteness, as though the music came from elemental forces of nature. There is a singular impersonality in this music which gives the feeling of wide spaces and timeless verities.

Voting for miscellaneous items in the repertoire resulted in the performance of the waltzes from Richard Strauss' comic opera, "The Chevalier of the Rose," and Wagner's prelude to the third act of "Die Walkuere." These were played with a verve that stirred the house to excited applause.

Among the auditors were 37 delegates to the fourth biennial conference of women's committees for symphony orchestras in the United States and Canada, representing 18 cities. These delegates and a few invited guests enjoyed on Saturday evening at Dumbarton Oaks a song recital by Maria Maximovich, who was assisted by that perfect accompanist, Celius Dougherty.

Mme. Maximovich disclosed a soprano voice of unusual range and variety of color as well as an artistry of the most rewarding kind. Her readings were marked by emotional warmth, innate musicianship and persuasive inflections. Her dramatic sense enables her to project her songs with communicative feeling, while her taste is evident in her restraint and finesse.

Her program avoided the traditional ways, containing only four familiar songs by Debussy, Rakhmaninov and Musorgski. She introduced a new lyric by Mary Howe, "Zuleikha," which is one of the best from the pen of our resident composer. A setting of a poem from Friedrich Bodenstadt's "Die Lieder des Mirza Schaffy," it has touches of oriental harmony and a melodic line of lovely contour.

French novelties were three of Ravel's "Melodies Populaires Grecques," and an aria from Massenet's "Sapho." Mrs. Howe's song was included in an American group: Ernst Bacon's "It's All I Have," Samuel Barber's "The Nun" and a setting by Charles Griffes of "The Lament of Ian the Proud" by William Sharp, alias Fiona Macleod. A Norwegian group contained Grieg's "Do You Know the Song," Halfdan Kjerulf's "Nightingale," Harold Lie's "The Letter Out of the Darkness" and "True Happiness" by Eyvind Almaes.

Mrs. A. I. Turner Dies; Mother of Tax Jurist

Mrs. Arramenta Ida Turner, 80, died last night after an illness of a few hours in Little Rock, Ark., the Associated Press reported. She was the mother of Judge Bolon B. Turner of the U. S. Court of Tax Appeals, of the Westchester Apartments.

American Beauties to Change Little Over Years, Prediction

A prediction that American beauties will look much the same in 2 centuries, or even 20, as they do today, was made yesterday by Dr. Ales Hrdlicka, of the Smithsonian Institution.

The noted anthropologist, who based his opinion upon years of comparative study of the peoples of the world, also revealed some fundamental beauty secrets in which cosmetics play no part at all.

"Beauty," said he, "is chiefly a matter of bodily health, a calm mind, and a refinement of features that comes from the possession of health and serenity."

Dr. Hrdlicka explained that a healthy body is usually the result of eating nutritious foods and general kind treatment. The care of the mind, he said, is equally important.

"There must be no irregular, or maladjusted thinking," he asserted, "for the mental attitude is reflected in the face, very clearly."

Even without the desired mental and physical well being, he said, "the natural refinement of features will continue, but in the manner of a flower growing in the dark ness." He explained refinement as the type of face we know today as compared with that of persons in the eras thousands of years ago.

American girls are not setting a standard of beauty peculiar to this country.

"They are about like any other girls," he said. "Many of our anthropologists thought some years ago that American girls were getting slightly taller. This growth seems to have stopped or was a miscalculation. In any event, the American girl isn't getting taller."

New Pastor Installed at Luther Place

The influx of warworkers to Washington presents Luther Place Memorial Church with the most challenging opportunity in its history, Dr. Carl C. Rasmussen said last night at installation services for the Rev. L. Ralph Tabor, new pastor.

MR. TABOR

Dr. Rasmussen, former Luther Place pastor and now faculty member of Gettysburg (Pa.) Theological Seminary, delivered the charge to Mr. Tabor. Dr. Raymond C. Sorrick, pastor of the St. Luke Lutheran Church, Silver Spring, and president of the Maryland Synod of the United Lutheran Church, gave the charge to the congregation. The church is at Thomas Circle.

Mr. Tabor, wearing a white surplice and purple stole over his black gown, sat in the front pew with members of the Luther Place Church Council, headed by President Arthur P. Black.

Dr. Rasmussen contended that the church's opportunity does not pass with a change in the neighborhood it serves. Just as the late Dr. John G. Butler, Luther Place Church's first pastor, once ministered to well-to-do Thomas Circle citizens when it was a suburb of the District, said Dr. Rasmussen, so must today's pastor serve another type—the throngs of warworkers from all States of the Union.

Seventh pastor in the 76-year history of Luther Place, Mr. Tabor succeeds Dr. Charles B. Foelsch, who resigned last October to become president of Chicago Lutheran Theological Seminary.

Transit Firms Here Held War Industries

. . . "the essentiality to the defense effort of the services rendered by the Capital Transit Co. can scarcely be disputed. Without transportation of Government war workers to and from their jobs, the entire defense program would be seriously hampered. PARADE OF AMERICAN HEROES ★ A COMMEMORATIVE CELEBRATION ★ THE HECHT CO.'S 47th ANNIVERSARY

"Speak Softly . . . but Carry A Big Stick!"

Statesman . . . Soldier . . . Hero . . . America's fighting President . . . that was Teddy Roosevelt! He was a man of action, determination, confidence and courage . . . and his simple philosophy of National Defense lay in the words: "Speak Softly, but Carry a Big Stick." America is carrying a big stick these days . . . the biggest in world history, and all Americans recognize the vital meaning of T. R.'s words, and the greatness of his vision.

When Teddy Roosevelt walked into the White House, as America's twenty-fifth President, Washington was little more than a thriving village . . . but great institutions were being born and nurtured here. Among them was The Hecht Co., founded in a tiny store-room on Seventh Street near F . . . and destined to grow with Washington, and parallel the Capital's development. That's why we've set aside our 47th Anniversary, as a commemorative celebration . . . to signalize the Onward March of Washington . . . and almost a half century of service to the Nation's Capital.

Our Anniversary Calendar is vast, and keyed to the spirit of wartime America. Chief among the exhibits and displays will be "A PARADE OF AMERICAN HEROES" . . . comprising a gallery of authentic photographs of the great men who have fought under the Stars and Stripes. From Dewey's victory at Manila Bay and Roosevelt's charge at San Juan Hill . . . to Jimmy Doolittle's raid on Tokyo, you'll view an exhibition of rare historical interest. Other Anniversary events will be announced from day to day in your Washington newspapers . . . and we cordially invite you to take note of these events as scheduled . . . and to participate, with us, in this Commemorative celebration to Washington . . . and America.

For many decades, the Anniversary Celebration has been looked upon in the retail world as a store-wide special selling event . . . but we do not believe that this procedure is consistent with America's 1943 wartime economy. Therefore our 47th Anniversary has been planned as a Commemorative Celebration, and not a merchandise selling event.

You are invited to view an authentic gallery of historical pictures, in

"THE PARADE OF AMERICAN HEROES"

An authentic gallery of historical pictures on display in The Hecht Co. windows . . . America's fighting men . . . from the Spanish-American War to the Present World Conflict . . . graphically shown in this rare and unusual display . . . which is dedicated to the Nation's War Savings Bonds and Stamps.

BE SURE TO SEE: The last bullet fired in the First World War . . . on November 11th, 1918, at 10:57 A. M. . . . the primer cartridge that set off the last shot against Germany from a 14-inch gun of the U. S. Naval Battery No. 14 at Thierville, France.

BE SURE TO SEE: The Allison V-17 Liquid-cooled Aircraft Engine . . . America's only chemically-cooled airplane power plant . . . now in use in the Flying Tiger's Curtis P-40, the Bell Airacobra, the North American Mustang, Curtis Kitty-Hawk, Curtis Tomahawk and the Lockheed Lightning . . . 1325 horsepower and built by General Motors . . . on display at the Victory Center, Main Floor.

BE SURE TO SEE: The sectionalized variable-pitch propeller . . . the authentic eight-foot model by Thompson . . . one of the features of the Propeller Exhibit . . . including the original blade bent in the forced landing of the "Winnie Mae" at Muroc Dry Lake, 1935.

BE SURE TO SEE: The American Red Cross Exhibit . . . the making of surgical dressings . . . food-packages for war prisoners . . . the Blood Donor exhibition . . . First Aid . . . Home Nursing . . . Knitting . . . Garment Making . . . Home Service . . . and other activities of the Red Cross.

BE SURE TO SEE: The Civilian Defense Exhibit . . . A Sector Post in operation . . . Control Center, fire system and communication lines . . . Equipment used in OCD work, including the Decontamination unit . . . air-raid warden equipment, gas-masks, etc. . . .

BE SURE TO SEE: The "Sniff Sets" . . . which enables you to identify various poison gases . . . demonstrated under the supervision of the Office of Civilian Defense.

BE SURE TO SEE: The colorful exhibitions and displays of the WAACS, the WAVES and the SPARS . . . both in our Commemorative Windows, and in special exhibits within the store . . . dedicated to America's "Women at War."

BE SURE TO SEE: The "Statue of Liberty" Window . . . the theme display of the Anniversary Celebration . . . dedicated to America's War Effort . . . and the continued selling of U. S. War Bonds and Stamps.
